DIED, in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, December 16, 1874, SARAH D. BIRCH, in the thirty-fifth year of her age. She was the daughter of Jesse L. and Elizabeth Carruth, and was married to W. D. Birch at the age of fifteen. She was a member of the church from her twelfth year till her death. She suffered the pains of consumption, but feared not the pains of death. She said her work was finished, and she desired to depart and be with her Savior. Sarah's faith failed not, "because she judged him faithful who had promised." She leaves a husband, seven children and many near and dear relations on this side the river. May the God of all comfort sustain them, so that they may live right—that when their course is finished they may be among those who "died in faith."

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH DOWDEN, wife of F. M. Dowden, and daughter of J. P. and Mary Mitchell, was born in Sabine parish, Louisiana, December 27, 1854, and died October 3, 1874. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1869 (her membership was at Holly Grove, Anacoco circuit,) in which church she remained until removed to the church triumphant. From the first hours of her sickness she said she was going to die. Her mother told her she hoped not. "Yes," says she, "I am. The angels are here waiting for me. Glory! glory! Good-by." After this she talked much about death, but without any dread of the future. She was sensible to the last. After directing who should preach her funeral she closed her eyes in death, leaving a bright testimony that she has gone to meet with loved ones gone before.

LYDIA EUNICE MITCHELL, daughter of J. P. and Mary Mitchell, was born February 7, 1872, and died December 26, 1874.

JORDAN DENSON JOHNSON was born April 22, 1821; married Miss E. M. Roberts, daughter of Rev. James Roberts, December 22, 1842, who died April 7, 1845; he then married Miss E. J. Pounds, October 28, 1845, who died July 17, 1866; he then married Mrs. Julia Standley, September 4, 1866. Bro. Johnson joined the Methodist Episcopal Church soon after his first marriage; was licensed to preach at Darlington, St. Helena parish, La., in September, 1857; was ordained deacon, by Bishop Paine, November 25, 1864, at Crystal Springs, Mississippi; was ordained elder, by Bishop Kavanaugh, at Hazlehurst, Mississippi, January 9, 1869. Bro. Johnson was paralyzed early in January, 1875. He was soon convinced that he must die, sought and found that fullness of God that is necessary to fit us for heaven, was filled with all the fullness of God, and was happy, ready and willing to depart and be with the Lord. He continued to grow weaker, and continued happy in God till the eleventh of March, 1875, when he died in peace.

THOMAS SIMMONS.

SISTER JULIA L. DALLAS, consort of Peter L. Dallas, of Neshoba county, Mississippi, was born in South Carolina, November 5, 1835; was married October 8, 1851, and died, after lingering for many months, of consumption, March 14, 1875. The unvarying testimony of those best acquainted with Sister Dallas establishes the fact of her consistent piety and devotion to Christ. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in February, 1854, and was happily converted to God in August of the same year. For more than twenty years she maintained her Christian integrity, evincing the genuineness and strength of her faith by her patience under affliction. She frequently expressed herself, during her last sickness, as anxious to live for the sake of doing good to her children and others, but willing to abide the decision of God's will. A few days before her death she called each of her children to her bedside and gave them her dying charge. She remained rational to the last, and among the very last utterances that came from her dying lips was this note of triumph: "Glory to God."

MRS. SARAH NORRIS, wife of James Norris, is no more. She was born in Selma, Alabama, July 12, 1820; was married June 28, 1836, and died in Autauga county, February 28, 1875.

It is now more than twenty years since I first met Sister Norris. The attachment then formed has increased with added years, and a dying message has induced this humble tribute to the memory of one whose lovely Christian, social and domestic character commanded the admiration and won the love of all. At the session of the Alabama Conference in 1853 our appointment was at Selma. We were met at the boat by Bro. Norris, and to the hospitalities of this dear family and home we were cordially welcomed. These bright spots are never forgotten by the itinerant in a strange land. Sister Norris was then in the bloom of life, lovely in person and manner, while from her sunlit face beamed every womanly and Christian grace. She was a beloved wife, a happy mother of lovely children; but in that household she "was the bright particular star." A true Christian, but always timid and modest, she was yet always to be relied on when any good thing was to be done—a heart brimful of sympathy for the wants and woes of others, and a hand ever ready for their relief. The year of her conversion the pastor said that if no other soul was saved, it was worth the year's labor.

Many an itinerant, welcomed and cheered, went forth praying:

"May angels ever guard the home
That gives the wanderer rest!"

for her husband was like-minded in the care of God's ministers. But time took the bloom of youth, and hurried her past its meridian day, to meet months and years of wasting sickness and disease. Consumption had fastened on that delicate frame, and wearisome days and nights were appointed unto her, through all of which her piety was beautiful. During her last months so precious had her Savior become that when by herself she would hold converse, as it were, with her blessed Redeemer. She sent me word she would bear my message to heaven, and tell Mattie—our daughter, who had preceded her—"you are coming and how much you miss her." Her own Willie and Annie had also gone on the returnless journey. Still she waited on till the evening of February 20, when she heard an angel call; and there went up one of the noblest, best and purest spirits of this earth. With streaming eyes we gaze after her, but cannot see the path she trod; but we knew that with her dear Annie

"She will summer high in bliss
Upon the hills of God."

DAS VEILCHEN.

FROM GOETHE.

Lonely and sweet a violet grew
The meadow weeds among,
One morn a rosy shepherd maid,
With careless heart and idle tread,
Came by,
Came by
The meadow lands and sung.

"Ah!" said the violet, "would I were
Some stately garden flower!
Then I might gathered be, and pressed
One little hour to her sweet breast;
Ah, me!
Ah, me!
Only one little hour!"

On came the rosy shepherd lass
With heart that idly beat,
And crushed the violet to the grass.
It only said: "How sweet!
How sweet!" it said with fainting moan,
"If I must die, to die alone
For her,
For her—
To die at her dear feet."

Old and New.

The Evangelists in London.

The accounts of the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London read like the history of a triumphal progress. At the first day's meeting, it is said, hundreds of persons were turned away from the room, and the same happened on succeeding days. The smallest audience is estimated to have consisted of ten thousand or twelve thousand persons. Other audiences are estimated at sixteen thousand and seventeen thousand. Mr. Moody's discourses are quite fully reported in the religious papers of London. They insist mainly on the necessity of conversion, and are, on the whole, very creditable. At a meeting in Exeter Hall Mr. Moody said: "What they wanted to do was to get the inquirers away from themselves and away from their feelings to the word of God. To tell a man who was inquiring the way of salvation to go home and pray was to do him a great injury. He heard another person tell a young man who was in deep concern: 'If you go to church on Sunday and say your prayers every night and morning you will go to heaven.' Another mistake was to tell people they were converted. Let God tell them so, not man. He believed they had suffered more in that way from their own friends than from anybody else. What they wanted was to bring them to the word of God straight, and tell them what it was to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. They did not want any 'ism' in the inquiry-room. They left the ministers to instruct them after they believed, but they wanted simply to point souls the way to Christ. The best of the whole work lay in the inquiry-room, and he pitied the man or woman who did not enjoy the luxury of leading a soul to Christ."

The same evening, at Agricultural Hall, Mr. Moody preached from the text: "'Seek the Lord while he may be found; and call on him while he is near.' He made an earnest appeal for prompt decision, and called on his hearers to carry out at once the invitation contained in the text. In doing so he rose to greater earnestness and eloquence than on any former occasion. The speaker, addressing the vast audience with all the power of his voice, called out: 'I call on you to come to God to-night.' Turning to the large array of ministers on the platform, he said: 'I ask you, ministers of religion, whether God may not be found here to-night?' The whole body on the platform, as with one voice, replied: 'Yes.' The force of sound took the audience by surprise, and seemed much to impress them. Then the speaker, turning to the large multitude before him, said: 'I appeal to some of you whether you have not found him here?'—to which there were responses from the audience of 'Yes, yes.' Continuing, he added: 'Oh, may thousands in London find him!'—to which many in the congregation responded 'Amen.'"

A correspondent of the Nonconformist, who attended the meeting on Sunday evening, March 14, describes the manner of conducting the service as "almost precisely the same as that adopted by the principal evangelical churches in the United States during the progress of revivals, with the exception that the inquirers passed out into another part of the building, separated from the general audience, instead of, as in America, going to the front seats, or 'penitents' benches,' as they are called, in front of the platform. Mr. Sankey's singing is very sweet, and, although there is no polished art or culture about his style, I should imagine that it is admirably adapted to the purpose he has in view. Both men seem thoroughly in earnest, and I shall never forget a short prayer which Mr. Moody offered before asking those in the audience who wished to be prayed for to stand up. His voice fell almost to a whisper, though you could hear every word spoken, owing to the solemn silence which prevailed. It was like that of a man struggling with the divine Being. At length, in a louder and almost indescribable tone, he said: 'Speak, Lord!' A short silence then prevailed. When Mr. Moody came forward to ask persons to rise I saw by his countenance that he was laboring under intense emotion. An expression of hopeful expectancy was, however, to be clearly traced in his features when his appeal was favorably received, and as one after another rose he repeatedly said in grateful tones: 'Thank the Lord!' 'This is indeed an answer to prayer.' While encouraging those who had remained to rise, he plainly intimated that he did not wish any to go into the inquiry-room who had not quite made up their minds to be Christians."

Mr. Dale, an eminent Congregational minister, spoke at a meeting the next day, saying, with regard to the statement that Mr. Moody's converts were not genuine ones, that "his testimony was that he had very rarely seen clearer and more definite evidences of the presence and power of the Spirit of God in the hearts of men than in the case of those converts. He did not think they would all stand; but he saw no reason why more of them should fall away than those converted by any other Christian ministry."

Says the Christian World: The requests for prayer are exceedingly numerous, so much so that they have to be classified, and are read out in the form of brief descriptions, each covering a number which come within the same category. So many "wives for husbands," "mothers for daughters," "sisters for brothers," are among the formulæ adopted; and when Mr. Moody has read out the requests he has done so with a felicity and force which have made this part of the service very effective. Mr. Moody expressed his belief that one thousand people had been converted in Liverpool, and that the work was, in fact, just commencing in that town. Lord Cavan read a letter from a friend in Glasgow, testifying to the reality and continuance of the movement in that city.

Dr. Cumming, speaking of Mr. Moody in one of his sermons, said he was particularly struck by the facility with which Mr. Moody contrived to select a verse from the Bible, and then to turn that verse about in every conceivable position, exhibiting, as it were, the various facets of a diamond. He felt they would be successful in their mission, and he strongly condemned those clergymen who found fault with them for being laymen, fearful lest they should encroach upon their preserves.—Methodist.

A Perfect Woman.

BY THE REV. J. L. BOSWELL.

"A perfect woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort and command;
And yet a spirit still, and bright
With something of an angel light."

"A perfect woman! Tell me where you can find her?"

Not in the land of the living, my curious friend—of course not! One such there was, but she has been dead these twenty-five hundred years, and left no daughter who was her equal. Her sepulcher is unknown, and it is in vain at this late day to make a pious pilgrimage in search of it. But we have her full-length portrait taken when she was in her glorious prime, and in colors which time will not dim nor accident destroy. A copy of it is in your house, my friend, laid away, it may be, on some neglected shelf. If so, take it down and look upon it.

It is the picture of a Jewish matron. She is a lady of wealth, and her husband is a leading statesman in the city where he dwells. He is well and widely known among the elders of the land. Children are in the house, and hired servants, and sometimes guests, and among them all she moves, a presiding genius. She has neither time nor disposition to pace a public platform and talk about a woman's mission, and talk and talk and talk until her nervous system is impaired. She has her work—a noble work—and quietly and sensibly she does it. Her heart is with her husband and her children at her home, and there she dwells content and happy. Strange this may seem, yet true; for she was a Jewess, and lived not in these wiser times, but very many years ago.

Good health she has, though she is wealthy and refined; strong and vigorous, though more than forty years of age. She has no need of patent medicines; for (mark this) she rises early, she works steadily, she puts her trust in the Lord, and in consequence she keeps a calm and even temper. She lived in the golden age when it was the fashion for a woman to be healthy. Perhaps had she lived now she would have violated every law of healthy living in dress, food and exercise—grown pale in overheated rooms—sat up the night long in fashionable parties, and then, a confirmed invalid, marvel at the inscrutable decree of Providence which permits her to be afflicted! Sickness is sometimes one's misfortune, and sometimes it is one's fault!

This perfect woman is a model housekeeper and "looketh well to the ways of her household." She did not marry for a support. It was never her desire "to eat the bread of idleness." Perhaps in her early education she was taught, among other fashionable "accomplishments," that of keeping a house, and of cooking a meal which would be worth eating. No doubt—for they had not modern civilization—young women of the wealthy classes were taught that which had some faint reference to their work in after-life. This woman is not ashamed to put her hands to the spindle and the distaff. She was skillful with the needle, as was seen in the "coverings of tapestry" and ornamental "girdles" which she sold to the merchants. She arose at early candlelight to arrange for the work of the day. Not only would she say to the servants, "Do this," but she was able to teach them how to bake a loaf or roast a joint. She was thoughtful of their welfare, and of course they tried to please her. She "giveth meat to her household and a portion to her maidens," and the "portion," you may be sure, was large enough to satisfy their hunger. She treated them kindly, as though they were human beings, members of her family, and not animated machines, hired and expected to work harmoniously at $10 a month. Rather strange her conduct was for a wealthy lady thus to be a household drudge; but then remember she was a Jewess, and lived very many years ago.

Though she loved her home, yet she did not always stay there. She considered her mansion in the city was her home and not her prison. Sometimes she went abroad. Not indeed to retail gossip from house to house, under the charitable pretext of "making calls;" nor yet to spend the precious hours in cheapening in the shops the costly finery which she never meant to purchase. When she left her home it was generally to go to the temple, for "she feared the Lord," or to the abodes of the poor and the sorrowing. "She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hand to the needy." She was full of generous sympathies, and in her the poor always found a friend. Faithful at home, she would yet find time, or rather make time, to gather with the "great congregation" in the solemn services of the sanctuary. Religion was to her strength, comfort and joy.

"She openeth her mouth"—else she would not be a woman!—"with wisdom;" that is good; and "in her tongue" is—what? Not foolishness; but "the law of kindness."

Let such a woman talk—she talks to some good purpose. Blessings on a woman's tongue—when its notes are not discordant, but low and sweet, touching the hearts of all who hear, like the breathings of an angel's harp!

Well, this perfect woman has her reward. To be sure, her life is a life of self-sacrifice; but sacrifice is sweet when prompted by love. She is in comparative obscurity; but that is to her no evil. The world does not know her virtues nor praise her; but better than the world's praise is the fact that "the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her," and "her children arise up and call her blessed." In them she lives, and is content to live, till her work on earth is done, and she calmly goes to her rest and to her reward on high.

Oh! if all the matrons in this age and land were such as she, how strong would be our homes; and then, of course, how great and glorious would be the nation and the church. But this woman! Alas! she belonged to a ruder age than this which is so highly polished. She was a Jewess, not a Christian, and she lived many, very many years ago.—Methodist.

Achan.

The reader will notice some striking points of analogy between this case of Achan at the opening of the Canaan dispensation, and the case of Ananias and Sapphira at the opening of the Christian age. Covetousness, the love of money, was the root-sin in each case. The demand for fearful judgment and vigorous retribution in the outset to head off a great temptation and to protect the people of God in scenes of fearful peril constitute yet other points of obvious analogy. There are times and seasons when justice of the sterner type toward individual offenders is the only real mercy to the masses.

In regard to the case of Achan, it is within our limited vision to see if we will that the Hebrew people were in most critical circumstances. They were just entering upon a scene of great and searching temptation. The people and cities of Canaan were rich; the Israelites were poor. Canaan had the resources of a somewhat high civilization; gold, silver, vessels of brass and of iron; goodly Babylonish garments—all dazzling before the eyes of a people forty years in a barren wilderness, and antecedently four hundred years afflicted in Egypt. Now suppose the Lord had given them free license to plunder, to steal and hide, and appropriate all they could lay hands on! This movement for the conquest of Canaan would have become a savage, plundering, marauding expedition, not a whit above the demoralizing wars of all barbarous tribes upon nations largely in advance of themselves in wealth and luxury. Could the God of Israel become a party to such a war of plunder? Would such avarice and theft and selfishness have improved the morals and the piety of the children of Israel? Would such license to his people have inured to the honor of Israel's God? And yet further, these fascinating spoils—these glittering prizes of gold and silver, and these ornaments of the cultured Canaanites—were linked in on every hand with idolatry. Art and wealth, in Canaan as in every other heathen nation, lent their power to augment the attractions toward idol-worship. If God would shut this floodgate of idolatrous influence sharply down, he could not have done less than he did in the case of Achan—make the first offender a fearful example of severe and terrible but just and righteous punishment.

Yet further, the utmost pains were taken to have this matter well understood beforehand. The preliminary precautions ran: "And ye in any wise keep yourselves from the accursed thing, lest ye make yourselves accursed when ye take the accursed thing, and make the camp of Israel a curse, and trouble it."—vi, 18. The sin of Achan had, therefore, these points of highest criminality: (a.) It was a "presumptuous sin," against known and most explicit prohibition, and in contemptuous defiance of God's authority. (b.) It was sacrilege—stealing from God; taking property that was devoted to God by special stipulation. To this it may be added that all the wealth of Jericho and the city itself fell into the hand of Israel by special miracle, wrought of God under these express stipulations.—Cowles.

MR. SPURGEON'S COW.—My grandfather was a very poor minister, and kept a cow, which was a very great help in the support of his children—he had ten of them—and the cow took the "staggers" and died.

"What will you do now?" said my grandmother.

"I cannot tell what we shall do now," said he, "but I know what God will do; God will provide for us. We must have milk for the children."

The next morning there came £20 to him. He had never made application to the fund for the relief of ministers; but on that day there were £5 left when they had divided the money, and one said: "There is poor Mr. Spurgeon down in Essex; suppose we send it to him." The chairman (a Mr. Morley of his day) said: "We had better make it £10, and I'll give £5." Another £5 was offered by another member, if a like amount could be raised to make it up to £20; which was done. They knew nothing about my grandfather's cow; but God did, you see; and there was the new cow for him. And those gentlemen in London were not aware of the importance of the service which they had rendered. Spurgeon.

Sensible Nonsense.

Archdeacon Hare has somewhere expressed the opinion that, as the next best thing to a very good joke is a very bad joke, so the next best thing to a very good argument is a very bad one. In both cases the extremes meet; the exquisitely good and the deplorably bad rest on nearly the same footing; it is only mediocrity which is "tolerable, and therefore not to be endured." For example, an Oxford scholar, meeting a porter who was carrying a hare through the streets, accosts him with this question: "Prithee, is that thy own hare or a wig?" It is impossible to excuse this, and impossible to help chuckling at it. Its very lameness—the limping in one leg—which would be objected to by a carping, laughter-proof critic, constitutes its great beauty. So in argument the self-same result which a fine piece of logic accomplishes regularly, by square, rule and compass, is now and then reached by its misshapen brethren per saltum, as a piece of luck. Could any syllogism in mood and figure be more convincing than the peasant's ludicrous logic: "How good of God it was to put Sunday at one end of the week! for, if he had put it in the middle, he would have made a broken week of it!" Again, who does not yield to the irresistible though comical reasoning of the tenant of a leaky house, who was asked during a rain-storm why he did not have it newly shingled: "Because," said he, "it is raining." "But why not repair it during the pleasant weather?" "Because there is no need of it." Some of the best thoughts in literature are those that thus limp in their logic, being absolute paradoxes; as, when Story says:

"Of every noble work the silent part is best;
Of all expressions, that which cannot be expressed."

Ben Jonson thought that when Shakespeare made Cæsar say,

"Cæsar never did wrong without just cause,"

the great dramatist made "the foremost man of all the world" utter nonsense; and so it might be in another man's mouth. But could anything else so fully express the mighty self-centered ambition—the enormous self-reliance of the man—as this assumption that Cæsar's needs had power to change the aspect of things, so that a thing which, coming from another, would be wrong, yet coming from him, an exceptional, godlike man, would get an impress of right?—Chicago Alliance.

BAD AS PAGANS.—Pope Pius the Ninth appears, says the New York Observer, to regard the Protestant churches and schools in Rome as worse than heathen temples. He has never happened to be in any land where Protestant truth and liberty are the molding elements in society, and he is perhaps to be pitied for his profound darkness, as much as blamed for malignant opposition to that which is good. But read what he has said. In an allocution addressed to the parish priests of Rome on the fourth ultimo, after remarking that there are now no temples at Rome consecrated to Jupiter, Mercury or Venus, he said:

"But, after all, this is not much. There are Protestant churches. If it may be said that they are less dangerous, they are nevertheless a motive for much affliction. At Rome, chosen by God to be the capital of the great Catholic family, ennobled by the blood of the martyrs—at Rome, justly adorned with the title of mistress of the truth—within the walls of that Rome where the majestic temples of the Christian religion rise, one cannot see without grief the establishment by the side of these temples, of halls and meeting-places, where it is pretended to render to God the worship rendered to him by heresy, which is a revolt against God himself. But what above all ought to excite your zeal as pastors of souls is the opening of certain schools, where, generally speaking, impiety rules as mistress, and seeks by all means to corrupt childhood and youth. To prevent the consequences of so great an evil you must employ all the means of which you can dispose, to prevent the corruption of so many young souls; for this corruption might by degrees insinuate itself into families and propagate the pest of unbelief."

SPIRES.—It isn't best to be too ambitious; or at least it is well to count the cost beforehand. Every church is inclined to aspire to a spire. But pray consider that it costs. You must make your foundation extra solid, and of course expensive. Then, as you go up, the cost increases in a rapidly ascending ratio. Then it is very liable to get out of repair, and the repairs are inordinately expensive. And the swaying of the spire is almost sure to create leakage at the point where the spire joins the roof. One church in this city has expended within a few years $1,000 on repairs proceeding from this very cause.

And, then, what do you want of a spire? If you want a bell and a clock, a tower will answer every purpose, and be quite as ornamental as the average of spires. If the money burns in your pocket, by all means send it to the church building fund of the Home Mission Society. What would build only a spire for you will build an entire meeting-house in Nebraska.—National Baptist.

OUR good minister once said if we were so foolish as to let people laugh us out of our religion, till at last we dropped into hell, they could not laugh us out again.

TRUTH is the strongest of all things, and frankness is but another name for truth. You are not likely to be deceived yourself when you never deceive others.

ALL men who do anything must endure a depreciation of their efforts. It is the dirt which their chariot-wheels throw up.

WHEN all other sins grow old avarice is young.

Religious Intelligence.

ACCORDING to Dr. Quint—the best authority—the Congregationalists in the United States number 330,391—a net increase over the previous year of 6,712. There are 7,614 Congregational churches in the world.

THE Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society received $703,855 during the past year, of which $25,000 were devoted to office expenses. It therefore costs but three and a half per cent. to carry on the business of the society.

THE Ultramontane Pfalzer Zeitung says that in case of vacancy of the papal see Prince Bismarck would use all his influence to have Cardinal Hohenlohe elected, and that the governments interested in the matter would accept this choice, as the secret documents of the Arnim trial prove.

THE Moravian Church in this country numbers 8,705 communicants, and increase of over 400 during the year. Including children and non-communicants, the strength of the denomination is 15,300. The 75 churches are located mainly in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

MILITARY conscription does not seem to work uniformly in the Turkish empire. Among the Nusairis, that heretical sect of Mohammedans (if they are Mohammedans) in whose midst the Reformed Presbyterians have a flourishing mission, the proportion of persons liable to conscription is 1 in 180. There are 12 Nusairi Christians, and 8 of these have been conscripted.

THE interest of the Greek Christians in the Protestant mission services at Damascus continues, according to recent reports, unabated. The native Christians of the United Presbyterian Church have been greatly stirred up to evangelistic labors. In view of these enlarged opportunities, A Bible book store and reading-room has also been opened in the most important bazar of the city.

THE little steamer Elbingowan has commenced her missionary service along the New Guinea coast and the islands between New Guinea and Australia. The connection between the European missionaries at Cape York and the Polynesian teachers employed in the mission is now more regularly kept up. The natives, so dreaded by shipwrecked sailors, continue friendly. As yet there have been no conversions.

SOME English and a few American residents in Italy are interested in the project of putting up a memorial chapel at Pra del Torno, a historical locality in one of the Waldensian valleys, which was the scene of conflict and brave endurance on the part of the faithful Vaudois people during their long persecution. A chapel is, moreover, very much needed there for the convenience of the peasantry, whose nearest church at present is several miles distant from that point.

AN English paper, alluding to Mr. Moody's visit to a large English town, says: "The hall where the meetings are held has been provided with nine thousand chairs. It may seem incongruous to say that a person is more likely to be converted in a chair than on a seat without a back, but this is really so, for if he be sitting in an uncomfortable position it is impossible that he should pay the same attention, or yield himself to the influences around him in the same degree that he would if his attention were not distracted by his physical discomfort."

THE flourishing station of the Church Missionary Society, Metakahtlah, is situated on the borders of Alaska. Indians from this American territory have visited the station and have shown great interest in the gospel. From the islands, four hundred and fifty miles to the north, earnest appeals have been made to be taught as the Tsimpheans are at Metakahtlah. The Greek Church formerly had missionaries in Alaska, but has recently withdrawn them. The Roman Catholics have one missionary stationed in that country. The Protestant societies are as yet unrepresented.

SOME months ago we gave an account of the intense evangelistic efforts which marked Rev. Mr. Schlater's work among the Kaffirs. Summoning all the Christian talent of his congregation, the missionary took one kraal after the other by storm, gathering classes of inquirers as the result of his protracted meetings among the heathen. During Mr. Schlater's absence in Scotland Major Malan, an enthusiastic Christian soldier, has had charge of his six stations. Recently he united them in a two days' conference, very much like those which have been held in England, and there was evident presence of the Holy Spirit.

AN English exchange says that in Hull, England, a holiness association of clergymen and dissenting ministers is formed to converse on subjects pertaining to the higher life. Clergymen in the country round are members of the meeting, and one sometimes rides from a distance of eighteen miles this winter season to be present. In the meetings the greatest interest, concord and unity exist. In March a special meeting was arranged to be held. In the meantime special services were to be held on Sunday afternoon to reach the masses without. The services were to be conducted jointly by a clergyman and a dissenting minister. There are composing this association sixteen clergymen and twenty-five ministers of all denominations.

THE receipts of the Wesleyan Missionary Society for the year 1873 74 amounted to $832,292. The missions of this society in Europe, India, China, West Indies and South and West Africa in direct connection with the home committee in England had 256 circuits, 332 ministers, 7,125 other agents, 73,700 church members, 7,279 members on probation and 68,221 scholars. Other missions of the society exist in connection with conferences in France, Ireland and various British dependencies. In these missions there are 652 circuits, 881 ministers, 3,506 other agents, 99,851 church members, 9,289 members on probation and 193,702 scholars. The Wesleyan missions are perhaps the most difficult ones to tabulate, as even in heathen countries a large proportion of their membership consists of white settlers and their descendants.

THE Richmond Whig says that Virginia has the only asylum in this country, or in the world perhaps, for insane people of the colored race. It has at the head of it as superintendent a gentleman of the first instincts of benevolence, highly intelligent, and who has enjoyed and utilized the advantages of the best medical schools in Europe as well as in his own country—a native Virginian, too, who knows the colored man from experience, sympathizes with him in his afflictions, and cares for him in his derangement as tenderly, and as studiously as though there were no difference of complexion between them; and he is ably assisted by his efficient associates in the discharge of the duties of the institution. While abused by theoretical philanthropists for want of humanity to the blacks, Virginia has shown herself practically their superior in justice and kindness, and in the exercise of charity to the colored people.

MENNONITES.—This religious sect originated in the sixteenth century, taking their name from Simonis Menno, their founder. They reside principally in Holland, Prussia, Russia, Canada and the United States. In America they have some 300 ministers, 500 congregations and 75,000 communicants. One of their distinguishing tenets is that it is wrong to fight, and they refuse to perform military duty. Those in Russia were promised exemption from this, but recently an imperial ukase has gone forth, which puts an end to this exemption. Hence, to avoid being dragged into the Russian army and compelled to do that which their Bibles and their consciences testify is wrong, large numbers have decided to emigrate to the United States, and the year 1875 will witness quite an accession to our population from this source. They will not only be peaceable citizens, but valuable members of the commonwealth in other respects, and it is to be hoped that the day is far distant when our government will, by a foolish military policy, drive them from our shores as the Russian government is now doing from theirs.

KURUMAN, so closely identified with the labors of Robert Moffat, is the outpost of Christian civilization in central South Africa. It is a welcome refuge for the travelers coming back from the wilds of the interior. Here the English postal service reaches its furthest station, and from this place the isolated mission posts farther north are supplied. At Kuruman the gospel maintains its hold upon the Bechuanas, and from this center it is carried to the ever-changing homes of the neighboring tribes. The most recent reports show that successful resistance has been made to that South African curse—intemperance. The quiet progress of the gospel among the Bechuanas contrasts strongly with its utter failure thus far among the Matabele, four hundred miles further north. Here the London society has had its station (there are now two of them—Inyati and Hope's Fountain) for ten years. A recent visitor sees no sign of success among these stubborn and warlike people. They respect the missionaries, declare their message to be good, but assert that it is quite impracticable for a Matabele to be a Christian. And indeed it can be said with truth of their political customs and social laws that evil is their good, and good their evil. It is to be hoped that the Matabele are not fair specimens of the natives of the far interior, around Nyassa, for which missionaries are about to start out, under the impulse which Livingstone gave for the latter region, as at an earlier period he did for the Matabele.

THE mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to London opened not quite so auspiciously as we might wish. Their services in other cities have certainly attracted great attention among Christians of all denominations and their value is generally recognized. Indeed it seems as if a religious awakening were inaugurated in Great Britain such as had not been experienced since the time of the Wesleys. On going to London Mr. Moody addressed a circular to about three thousand five hundred of the "clergy and ministers" of the city, asking a conference with them, at which he would lay open his work before them. The meeting was attended by about two thousand, and the direct and sensible replies of Mr. Moody generally gave much satisfaction. He explained that he was but a lay preacher, that his was a work of awakening only, that he gathered no converts into churches, but that he wished to turn over the inquirers to the clergy to instruct and receive. All went pleasantly till a clergyman, who with engaging frankness described himself as a "red-hot Ritualist," demanded to know if he and those who shared his views would be at liberty to take a part in the work of the inquiry-rooms; also whether the converts who happened to belong to their congregations would be sent to them for further spiritual advice and guidance. Mr. Moody refused to take upon himself the responsibility of giving a reply to this question, saying its decision would be left to the committee. The chairman was appealed to; but he also refrained from giving a definite answer. This led to much confusion, and Mr. Moody's evasion was unfavorably commented on. Otherwise the impression of the meeting was good and the first public meeting reported was a success. The Ritualists were proposing to enter heartily into the services, and indeed they have hitherto held successful revival-meetings in the metropolis. The Agricultural Hall has been secured from the first of March for ten weeks, at £50 a week; also Exeter Hall for two months, for the daily prayer meeting. The city has been divided into four sections, and Messrs. Moody and Sankey will spend a month in each.—Independent.

Spiritual Health.

Bodily health occupies the thought and solicitude of people because their comfort, success and life depend upon it. None are content to lead a sickly existence, or to allow the inroads of disease if they can be helped. Health is the greatest of earthly blessings, and there is reason beyond mere courtesy which prompts the inquiry concerning the physical welfare of our friends. The Christian will be even more watchful over the condition of his soul than of his body. There is infinitely more at stake, and it is an interest that lies as near to his consciousness as any that belongs to the outward man. Any one whose spiritual life has opened into conversion and assurance, and who realizes the importance of perseverance until the crown is gained, will be solicitous about the state of his heart.

It is even more liable to disorder than the body, and is more easily affected by unfavorable conditions. There are few in perfect physical health, even among those who usually claim to be well. Of how many can it be said that they are healthy Christians, living up to their privileges, and that they are in a wholesome and sound condition? We habitually speak of good Christians and of poor ones, of those that are weak and of those that are strong. And so it is. There are degrees of spiritual vitality, there is arrested development, there are deformities, there is prostration and symptoms of ailing, more or less serious. The fluctuations in the spiritual are nearly as well marked as in the physical. There are some who have a uniform and robust career, and whose path is progressive as the shining light. But with the most there is a sad mixture of light and shade, and a variable and inconstant experience. Christians feel that it is not altogether well with them. They are not dead, neither are they fully alive. Faith is weak, the affections are sluggish, the temper is not sweet; the eye is not altogether single. There is hope of being better some day—that it is a temporary indisposition that has happened to them—but their state is not satisfactory.

How may Christians be well? What are the laws of spiritual health? We might inquire into their diet. Much depends upon the nourishment. The soul must be fed or it will be puny and waste away. Christ is the bread of life, and his truth is the meat. Then there is milk and strong meat. Milk will do for babes, but meat is needed for older souls. The Bible must be studied, Christ in all his offices must be appropriated, and there must be a generous reception of the doctrines of salvation. The question should be asked: What am I feeding on? Am I eating the daily bread which God provides? Too many souls are sickly and dying for lack of food. They do not read their Bibles, they are hopelessly pining and falling into an incurable marasmus, because they are ignorant, and neglect the teaching and stimulating nutriment which sound doctrine affords. Thousands of professed Christians are dying of voluntary starvation.

Exercise is the next thing to diet. There can be no bodily health without it. The lungs must have free play in the open air, the muscles must be strengthened and developed by use, and the whole system must be toned up by the sunshine and the abundant oxygen of out-of-door life. Shut a healthy man up, and he falls into morbid frames of mind, and all the organs become deranged. The Christian must have exercise. His religion is not for the closet only, nor for the quiet recesses of his own heart. It is not a thing to be altogether expended in meditation and in selfish enjoyment, but it must be put to work. No Christian soul can be in health unless engaged in active duty. The spiritual tone may be low, the flame of love flickering, and comfort almost gone. Go to work for Christ and you will feel better. Stir out into the open air, take a good sweat of cross-bearing in some form, seek out the sick, find a Sunday school, take hold of a weak church, pay your dues to the preacher, determine to do something for God, and, our word for it, you will feel like another man. Young converts go back to the world because they never really go into the church. They do not break the ice at once and enter heartily into the prayer meeting, and take a personal part in the exercises—they neither sing, pray nor speak. They do nothing, and they soon come to nothing. Exercise is a grand condition of spiritual health. Many are fighting the devils of hyppo and doubt and depression in their closets and in their secret heart, who would vanquish the whole legion of tempters by giving themselves to honest and thorough hard work in the service of Christ. No work, no health of soul is the rule.

How can we be well? Eat the strong meat of the gospel, live much in the open air of religious labor, and attend to all the minor means of stimulating and nourishing the spiritual life. How much do we study the word of God, how much do we pray in secret, how much reading in the way of solid religious books? Christ is able even to the uttermost, the grace of God is sufficient, the Holy Spirit is ever ready to impart life and assurance. But without secret prayer, without knowledge, without the diligent improvement of every appointed means, the soul will languish, and in the end it may perish. Take care of the health of the soul. It must be kept at its best to be of much account for usefulness, and to be in a condition to resist the invasion of temptation and sin. A slight cough is not much in itself, and the flush on the cheek may not be hectic, but the tubercles may be forming. The diseased spot may be nothing, and it may be the beginning of those cancerous roots which shall spread and consume the body.

We have only indicated some of the conditions of spiritual health but above all of these is the Healer himself. There is balm and a physician. We can never be well until Christ has cured our sin-sick souls. If not in health, go to him. If you have relapsed, go to him as at the first. No one can heal himself, none can cure the leprosy of sin but Jesus. Wash in the Jordan of the atoning blood, and then live by faith in the Savior. "Wilt thou be made whole?" The Redeemer is ready to save; he is able, willing. The cleansing blood, the healing power, the unsearchable riches! Think of these things, and be well—be restored to perfect soundness.

Work for the Church.

Religion to some people seems to consist in feeling and enjoying the good things of the gospel. A man embracing religion with this view of it will settle down into a receptive habit of mind and heart, and the only satisfaction he will find will be in devouring the truth without digesting it. He will be quick to receive everything good—slow to give out anything. He will stand upon a corner in an "attitude of receptivity" to catch the blessings as they come from "both ways." All the blessings of grace appear to be intended for him alone. Religions gravitation moves everything by the centripetal force. The center is himself. Like an Argus, he watches with his hundred eyes for religious enjoyments. Like a Briareus, he reaches with his hundred hands for every favor which religion brings. The effect of such a view of religion dwarfs it to a very selfish principle. The result of such a practice of religion causes it to degenerate to a mere emotion. Such a man appears to be a bottomless receptacle, into which all the blessings of religion flow—out of which none of them ever rise. We look at him and wonder what can be the matter with him. He is in the exact condition of a gluttonous gormandizer. By his habit of ever receiving and never giving out, always devouring and never digesting, he has unfitted himself for the noblest, highest and most beautiful sphere of Christian life. As the man who reads books and magazines and newspapers by the thousand dissipates his mental power and hinders its healthy development, so the man who is continually receiving spiritual lessons and blessings, without imparting them to others, dwarfs his religion to a mere feeling of complacency, and in the highest form of Christian life he is a mere cipher. In the sphere of Christian work, where success depends upon rapid action and earnest effort, he is not only a cipher, but he is a cipher that is very much in the way. The clear teaching of the word of God reveals the religion of Jesus to us as an aggressive force, pushing itself out in all directions. It is a principle which proposes not only to create enjoyment in the soul, but to map out the work of probation, and to govern the conduct and regulate the aspirations. The success of this aggressive power of religion does not depend upon what a man feels, but upon what he does! Methodism has long ago throttled "that enthusiastic doctrine." Success here, as well as elsewhere, is attained by work. Strength is won and increased and enlarged by action. When a man bows down in humility at the feet of Jesus and receives his pardoning grace, and then rises up with the determination of the prophet throbbing with every pulse of his being, "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth," he begins to enter upon the highest plane of Christian life. The highest form of religion is to put forth persistent effort to make others the recipients of its blessings. The most efficient Christian life is that which gives out what is received. It not only accepts the favors of Heaven, but, having tasted of their sweetness, scatters them to others. It is not merely passive under the influences of God's grace, but it is active under the constraining power of Christ's love. It acts with a contrifugal force, sending every blessing it receives out in search of some more needy soul. It "casts its bread upon the waters"—upon broad, deep, strong streams—and it flows on and out to feed many hungry hearts. With winning condescension it stoops to "Little deeds of kindness,

Little words of love."

This is the highest type of religion. This is the kind of religion that was exemplified so gloriously in the life of Jesus. We might say it is the mighty tide of the ocean of God's love flowing out in grandeur and washing all shores. We might liken it to the sun, flashing away the darkness by his rising, spreading life and joy by his walking through the heavens—going down in a splendor which ravishes the soul. We might compare it to a dripping cloud scudding along and dropping fruitful showers in thirsty places.

Reader, would you have your life to be such? It is attainable only by personal, persistent effort to do good. When you have converted self into a channel through which the blessings of religion may flow on to others, then you may look for the grandest experiences of your probation—then you will have the keenest perception of what Jesus meant when he said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Chrysostom.

The proper name of this eminent writer and pulpit orator was John; but such was his fame as an orator that he was called, "Chrysostom, the golden-mouthed." He was born A. D. 347, at Antioch. He was blessed with a mother eminent for her piety and intelligence. Anthusa had so many virtues that she commanded the admiration of heathens. Libanius, one of the most distinguished representatives of the heathenism of the period, exclaimed, in allusion to this noble woman: "Ah, gods of Greece! what wonderful women are among the Christians." Anthusa became the wife of a man of high military rank, but became a widow at twenty, and devoted her life to the Christian and intellectual rearing of her son. Libanius, his teacher, regarded Chrysostom as his best scholar, and desired that he might be his successor as a professor of rhetoric or forensic eloquence. Chrysostom entered upon this rhetorical career, but soon broke with the world, and resolved to consecrate himself to the duties of religion. He was formally received into the visible church by Meletius, Bishop of Antioch. His first impulse, like most of the cultivated and ardent young Christian men of that age, was to embrace the monastic life. Many of the most distinguished divines of that age and its immediate predecessor had given to this mode of life the influence of their illustrious names. The theory then was that a Christian man could give a nobler and more potential example of the purity and blessedness of Christianity in the self-denying life of the monk than by any other means. He could pour contempt upon the vanity, hollowness and insufficiency of material and temporal things, and show forth the higher and more enduring blessedness of communion with God. His mother had the wisdom and the power to defeat this mistaken aspiration. She took him by the hand and led him into the room in which he was born, and by tears and remonstrances entreated him not to leave her. Moved by filial gratitude and love, he yielded to her wishes. After her death Chrysostom spent some years in monastic retirement, and maintained his ascetic habits through life; yet he devoted most of his days to active usefulness.

He seemed to have little ambition for church offices. While he was but a reader in the church at Antioch his merits pointed him out as the man for the bishopric; but he evaded the election by some sort of ruse which he justified on the ground that the good end he sought justified the means. The Oriental people have never had as nice and conscientious conceptions of the inviolable sacredness of truth as the Western Christians have understood the Scriptures to enjoin.

After the death of his mother Chrysostom escaped from Antioch to some mountains near the city, where he spent six happy years in solitude and study, especially of the Holy Scriptures. His severe study and bodily mortifications damaged his health, and compelled a return to a more active and healthful mode of life. He was ordained a deacon, and then presbyter. He spent some sixteen or seventeen years of his life at Antioch as preacher and writer. Here he wrote his commentaries and homilies. He became quite renowned as an orator.

About A. D. 397 Chrysostom was chosen, without his agency, Patriarch of Constantinople, then the capital of the Roman world. In this distinguished position he labored for several years with happy effect. But his plainness and unsparing rebukes of sin, especially in high places, excited the ire and indignation of the court, especially of the Empress Endoxia, a young and beautiful woman, who despised her husband and indulged her passions. The rising fame of Chrysostom excited the envy of Theophilus, Patriarch of Alexandria, who, though a bishop, was not above the weakness of envy and ambition. This man lent himself to the service of the Empress, and it was not long until occasion was found against the pure and faithful preacher. Chrysostom was deposed and exiled. An earthquake immediately occurring, the people, who revered and loved Chrysostom, believed it was an expression of the displeasure of Heaven at what had been done, demanded his restoration, and in three days after his deposition he was restored to his patriarchal throne. But, as he abated nothing of his severity, he was soon deposed again and exiled; but before he reached his destination he died at Comana, in Pontus, A. D. 407, aged sixty years. But thirty-one years afterward the son of the Empress—Theodosius, the Emperor—brought back his remains and deposited them in the imperial tomb at Constantinople.

Chrysostom was the most eminent of the Greek fathers for his writings and eloquence. One writer claims for him the union of all the oratorical attributes—the natural, the pathetic and the grand. He was a diligent and copious writer. His works comprise some thirteen folio volumes; among them six hundred homilies, reckoned among the best produced by the fathers. But, what is better still, he left the luster of a shining example and the purity of a spotless fame.

Hinderances and Discouragements

MR. EDITOR: Hinderances to the success of a preacher, which may be avoided, are usually the result of covetousness, indifference or neglect upon the part of the church. The manner of his reception in his new field of labor has more to do with his success than the world is aware of, or than we ourselves often imagine.

We are not so much in favor of smoking dinners and social reception parties, and such like spasmodic demonstrations, to be heralded to the world through the papers. These are too exhaustive. We knew a missionary meeting where means were used by which, whether proper or improper, an enthusiasm was gotten up and the people were induced to give; and they gave cotton and money and jewelry, and almost every other imaginable thing. The result was that the church in that community gave no more for years, but made that occasion a sort of epoch to date from when they gave thus and so.

When a preacher is sent to a church, whether it has previous acquaintance with him or not, it should receive him as its preacher, coming properly accredited by the Conference, a party altogether responsible, and then provide for him accordingly. A few practical incidents in the life of a preacher will suffice to show that they have not always been received in this way.

We knew a preacher fourteen years ago, "in the body," who went to his circuit in good time. According to direction, he first found a leading member of the church on the circuit; got there near sundown on a miserably cold evening in January. He was shown into the parlor (by a servant,) which was elegantly furnished; but O how cold! and especially for the baby. They waited; finally the brother and proprietor came in, with heavy brow and anything but sunshine in his face. After the usual ceremony of introduction he said: "I thought we were to have a young man this year." "No, sir; I have a family, as you see." He continued: "This circuit is not able to support a married man, and if I was the preacher sent here with a family I'd leave." He continued: "I supported the preacher and his family last year, and I shall not do it any more." Emphatic! A pause ensued, rather painful, when his wife whispered: "Let's go somewhere else." But it was too late; the night, at least, had to be spent there. On another occasion he went to a circuit where there was no parsonage, and where he could find no place to board. As a final resort he went to a hotel; the proprietor was a lady. He asked for a room and board by the month; she hemmed and hawed, and said: "Why, to board your family would cost not less than $50 per month." "Well," said the preacher, "the question is: Can I get board?" She continued: "Did you know Mr. Jones, a preacher who went from here to California?" He said he did not. "Well," she said, "he boarded with me three months, and left without paying me a cent." "Ah, well," said the preacher, "if that is what you are afraid of I will pay you in advance." "No," she said, "I do not wish it in advance." Like the Frenchman, if you no got 'em me want 'em; if you got 'em me no want 'em. The difference in being acquainted and unacquainted with the preacher and his family was at the end of the first month. She reduced the board bill just fifty per cent. But what heart did the preacher have for his work during all this distrust?

He was sent to still another circuit; advised with the stewards in reference to a house to rent. They accordingly looked and reported as follows: About a half mile from town there is a house which can be had without much cost. There is no kitchen; but then we can have a temporary one put up without much cost; and so we think, upon the whole, that is the best chance. The preacher went to see it; and oh, my! what a chance. A lone room, about sixteen feet square, made of pine logs, with a fence in front about three rails high. He said to himself: "My wife shall never live here." Now he resolved to try his own resources, and soon found a good house, well situated, and already furnished, as the owner had moved to his plantation; but $250 was the least that he would take for it per annum; so he took it and became individually responsible for the payment. It is due the church to say that it paid the rent, all of it; yet it was after they knew the preacher; and he would have greatly preferred never to have seen that log cabin. However, his introduction to his congregation was rather opportune. A good deal mortified at what had gone before, as an introduction to his first sermon to them he said: "I know that you did not want me; neither did I want to come to you; but the Bishop sent me, and I am here. Now I propose this, inasmuch as we are both disappointed: If you will agree to bear with me I will agree to bear with you, and we can surely get along together one year—only one year. The Conference year is short; the work to be done is too important to lose any time."

J. P.

MANSFIELD, LA., March 9, 1875.

BISHOP KEENER left on Tuesday, the twentieth instant, for Missouri. Thence he goes to the meeting of the Bishops at Nashville, May 5, and home again probably by the middle of May.

TO HIM whom the science of nature delighteth, every object bringeth forth good proof of his God.

Texas University.

Rev. F. A. Mood, writing to the Galveston Christian Advocate, says:

The continual growth of the number of students at the seat of the Texas University has developed an increasing demand for comfortable boarding places for their accommodation. Since our location here several dwellings for that purpose have been erected and several others enlarged for the purpose. Everything now indicates that we have cause to apprehend that unless our accommodations for students are materially enlarged we will be exposed to loss of patronage at our opening in October next. I need not point out the evils that would follow such a state of affairs.

Good, intelligent, firm Methodists, who know how "to rule well their own household," having means to erect suitable dwellings for the purpose of accommodating students, can find eligible lots proximate to the University at reasonable rates. Correspondence is invited on the subject; or, what would be more satisfactory, visits from parties desiring to engage in this business are desired. I can be found always at the University building.

The church has reason to rejoice at the steady, healthy and safe growth of this tree, I trust, of the "Lord's right hand's planting." Twenty-six counties of the State are represented in our halls, scattered among the six patronizing Conferences. Good order and an excellent average of scholarship obtain among the students. Out of debt, and without the power by our charter to create a debt, the "patient continuance in well-doing" on the part of the church has but to be maintained to afford the sons of Texas all proper facilities for securing higher education.

Our commencement exercises will take place on Tuesday, July 20, the public exercises beginning on Sunday, July 18. To all who still believe Texas to be an educational Nazareth, out of which "no good can come," we say, as Philip said to Nathaniel: "Come and see."

MURDER OF THE REV. J. C. MILLER.—We are shocked, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, to hear of the murder of a most estimable minister of the South Carolina Conference, the Rev. J. C. Miller. We deeply sympathize with the relatives and friends of this excellent, ill-fated brother, and hope that his diabolical murderer will be arrested and brought to condign punishment. The Rev. J. Emory Watson, of the South Carolina Conference, writes us, April 6:

"Bro. Miller, the preacher in charge of Cane Creek circuit, was murdered last Saturday morning at about eleven o'clock. Yesterday I saw the spot, which is about three miles from the Santuc depot, Spartanburg and Union railroad. Then I went a few hundred yards further to the house of Mr. Mabry Thomas, where I saw his lifeless body. I left a group of women, members of his flock, weeping in the room where his body is lying. A negro—doubtless a highway robber—was seen following Bro. Miller along the public road. Bro. Miller was shot twice in his breast, and was robbed of his hat, spectacles, watch, pocket-book and overcoat. That community is terror-stricken—women are afraid to go abroad, and parents are afraid to send their children to school. No thunder-cloud that ever rolled across the sky could be so black as is this deed. Bro. Miller was a meek, humble, innocent man. He was a member of the South Carolina Conference. He was a brother-in-law of the Rev. A. M. Chreitzberg, the gifted editor of our Minutes."

MAY MEETINGS IN NASHVILLE.—On Monday, May 3, the board of trust of the Vanderbilt University meets at nine o'clock A. M.

On Wednesday, May 5, the Bishops will meet at their room in the Publishing House at nine o'clock A. M.

On Wednesday, May 5, the book committee will meet at the Publishing House at nine o'clock A. M.

On Friday, May 7, the Board of Missions will meet at the mission-room in the Publishing House at nine o'clock A. M.

On Sunday, May 9, the various Methodist pulpits in Nashville and Edgefield will be filled by the Bishops and other ministers in attendance.

REV. F. A. MOOD, writing to Bishop Keener from Georgetown, Texas, says: "Our brother, Rev. A. G. Stacey, died April 8, and was buried at Austin yesterday, at four o'clock P. M. His disease was pronounced to be rheumatism of the brain. I doubt not it was excessive mental anxiety. He leaves a large and dependent family." Bro. Stacey was a man of culture, an excellent writer and preacher, and an experienced educator. His well-known work, "The Service of Song," is a book of much merit. At the time of his death he was, we believe, president of Austin Female College.

R. W. BLEW, of the Western Methodist, gave us a call this week. He reached the city on Tuesday, the twentieth, and expected to leave for Florida on Wednesday. Sorry that our excellent confrere could not tarry longer. Uncle Bob is known by his "letters" throughout our connection, and also as one of the publishers of the Western Methodist. We are most happy to have seen him face to face, even for so brief a time.

EMORY AND HENRY.—The commencement exercises will begin on Sunday, June 13, with the baccalaureate sermon by Bishop Doggett. On the sixteenth of June, the closing day of the session, the Bishop will deliver the annual address before the literary societies of the college.

The Overcoat Doxology.

"Praise God from whom"—and all through the congregation there is a general stir to find hats and draw on overcoats, so that by the time those who have nothing more important to do than to join in the singing have come to:

"Praise him all creatures here below"—a number of these same "creatures" are in a deadly wrestle with sleeves and lining by a backward measurement of arms. Much they are thinking about praising the Highest! Their chief concern seems to be that they shall be ready to dart out as soon as the benediction is pronounced, to stand on the sidewalk in front and criticise the people as they come out; or hurry away to some less "tiresome" place. Well, well! and the saints above—"Ye heavenly host"—how pitiably they must look down upon this contest between overcoat and praise to God! Hearing the appeal of a divided, half-hearted congregation coming up from beneath some heaven-pointing spire, is it likely their pure spirits will be wrought into a greater devotion and thankfulness? We need not answer.

What is a doxology for, if not to express gratitude to God? And if this gratitude be felt by only a few, had not the pastor better preach a series of sermons on "The Duty of Thankfulness," or in some way awake those who are careless to a sense of their irreverence? The very words—"from whom all blessings flow"—silence all question as to the duty; and who can indulge much religious sentiment in connection with a mental problem of economizing time?

We believe it to be thoughtlessness principally. The devil has gained some advantage in the souls of believers, and, from making them wander in their prayers toward the last, finally gets behind, begging to assist them on with their overcoats! Indeed! And this is the same spirit of darkness now urging to the shortening of God's time, who will ere long jeer over the too-late repentance of a lost soul. Who shall say but some of these may be among the number of his victims—those who irreverently consider the ordinances of God's house?—Methodist Recorder.

THE reaction in Spain toward feudalism and the "dark ages" generally goes on apace. The clerical influence is again dominant. All the liberal measures which the republic set on foot have been discarded and annulled. The civil marriage law has been repealed, confiscated church property restored, the jury system abolished, the schools and entire educational system of the country given back to the control of the clergy, and Castelar's position as director of the higher educational system made so uncomfortable that he has been obliged to resign and quit the country. Several of the foremost professors of Madrid University have been arrested and banished for presuming to petition the King against these reactionary changes. And the government, it is now reported, declares its intention of exiling all professors who protest against the recent educational laws, or who resign chairs on account of their promulgation. How wide the difference between the meaning of the terms "religious liberty" in Germany from what they are seen to mean in Spain! When our Roman Catholic friends adhere consistently to their ideas of civil and religious liberty alike in Italy and Germany, England and Spain, the United States and Acapulco, they will then certainly command our respect and our sympathy.—Advance.

TYPES AND EMBLEMS is the title of a new volume of sermons by C. H. Spurgeon, and published by Sheldon & Co., New York. These sermons were preached on Sunday and Thursday evenings, and are in the best and most popular style of the noted preacher. The topics are indicated by the title of the volume, and are on the Star of Jacob, The Only Door, A Silly Dove, Our Banner, The Fainting Hero, and like illustrative and figurative subjects. For sale by George Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

CHRISTIANITY is Christ. Understand him, breathe his spirit, comprehend his mind. Christianity is a life, a spirit.—F. W. Robertson.

RESTAURANT.—The Four Seasons Restaurant, kept by John Bosio, Esq., has been removed from the old stand, where it had earned so much popularity as a first-class eating-house, to its present commodious premises at 101 Chartres street, between St. Louis and Conti. The enterprising proprietor has greatly increased his facilities for the accommodation of guests and dining parties. He has comfortably furnished rooms and private dining-rooms at reasonable rates. See advertisement.

"I GUARANTEE ALL MY SHOES TO WEAR AS WELL AS ANY THAT COME TO THIS MARKET."—The above is the language of Mr. Estoup, proprietor of the large and well-filled shoe store at 382 and 384 Dryades street. Call and examine the leather and workmanship entering into the manufacture of his stock, and you will be satisfied. See his advertisement elsewhere.

BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA AND CATARRH TREATED BY MEDICATED SPRAY INHALATIONS.—Dr. J. W. Luffingwell devotes his special and entire attention to the treatment of diseases of the throat, lungs and heart, and has attained a widespread reputation in the use of the medicated spray. See his card in another column. His office is 230 Canal street.

PAY POSTAGE.—Subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid at the old rates—viz.: two dollars per year—and whose subscriptions run into 1875, are required under the new postage law, which goes into effect January 1, to pay postage at the office of mailing. The subscription price hereafter includes the postage. Two cents per month each month that the subscription has to run, will be sufficient to pay for the ADVOCATE.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LIVER REGULATOR.—A very general complaint, that seems to spare neither class nor condition of person, is seated in the liver. Many with whom begone countenances, despondent spirits and depressed feelings exaggerate every event, until even suicide has been known to result from this morbid condition of body and mind. Simmons' Liver Regulator is said to be a specific for affections of the liver, spleen and kidneys, and that, unlike most preparations, it fully meets the wants of the patient whose liver or stomach is disorganized, and often restores the emaciated and spiritless dyspeptic sufferer to a more hopeful condition of life than he could otherwise hope to attain.

The Episcopal Methodist says: "This medicine is acknowledged to have no equal as a liver medicine, and it gives us great satisfaction and supreme pleasure to indorse what skill has developed in securing so valuable a remedy as Simmons' Liver Regulator."

ICE DEPOT.—Messrs. Warner & Childress have established, at 42 Carondelet street, an ice depot for the accommodation of consumers in that part of the city, and as a convenience to commission merchants who order for country customers. Arrangements can be made by families, either through their merchants or directly with Messrs. Warner & Childress, for a regular supply during the summer. It will be well for parties wishing to effect summer arrangements to apply at once. They also propose to supply families in the city. They may be relied upon as honorable and fair dealers. See advertisement.

WE NOTICE that at Gregg's Sewing Machine Depot, 151 Canal street, they are doing a thriving business in spite of the general dullness of the times. This is owing to the care and attention which all orders are given, and the pains taken to satisfy every customer. There is connected with the sewing machine department a purchasing agency, under the management of Mrs. Ada Gregg. Parties in the country, and especially ladies, will find it very convenient to order articles of clothing, fashion, etc., through Mrs. Gregg. For particulars see advertisement elsewhere.

CONFECTIONERY AND ICE CREAM. The establishment of Mr. John Meirer, at 806 Magazine street, will doubtless prove a great convenience to the citizens residing in that part of the Garden District. His cool soda water and mead, fresh pastry and ice cream will be a convenience to those wishing to enjoy these luxuries, enabling them to obtain them without the expense of car fare; which, besides the time occupied in the trip down town, would amount to as much as the cooling drinks cost at their doors.

TEA AND COFFEE DEPOT.—Messrs. Grimes & Co., at 419 Dryades street, advertise in another column their fine stock of coffee—parched coffee, ground coffee—and all the choice brands of teas, and assure prompt attention to country orders.

FASHIONABLE MILLINER.—Mrs. C. Samson, at 605 Magazine street, we recommend as a reliable and faithful milliner. She has just returned from New York with a fresh and complete stock of goods. See card elsewhere.

WORKINGMEN'S GROCERY STORE. This large establishment of eighteen years' standing, conducted by its experienced and enterprising proprietor, J. D. Reel, Esq., offers in purchasers a rich variety of choice groceries at the lowest cash prices, assuring fair dealing, full weight, and the best articles in every branch of the grocery line. Call at his store, 779 and 781 Tchoupitoulas street, and read his advertisement in our columns.

THE BEAUTIFUL SONG.

There's a song in the air!
There's a star in the sky!
There's a mother's deep prayer
And a baby's low cry!
And the star rains its fire while the Beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a King!

There's a tumult of joy
O'er the wonderful birth,
For the Virgin's sweet boy
Is the Lord of the earth.
Ay! the star rains its fire and the Beautiful sing,
For the manger of Bethlehem cradles a King.

In the light of that star
Lie the ages impearled;
And that song from afar
Has swept over the world.
Every hearth is aflame, and the Beautiful sing!
In the homes of the nations, that Jesus is King!

We rejoice in the light,
And we echo the song
That comes down through the night
From the heavenly throng.
Ay! we shout to the lovely evangel they bring,
And we greet in his cradle our Savior and King!

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 6.

BARNEY'S CONVERSION.

Barney was very fond of talking, and after I had given him his lesson he said to me:

"Darlint"—he always called me "Darlint" when he first came there—"Darlint," said he, "an' shure an' does ye belave in the Bible?"

"Why, of course I do, Barney," said I; "what a heathen you are to ask such a question. I thought you were a good Catholic; don't the Catholics believe in the Bible?"

"Catholic, is it?" said he. "Niver a bit of a Catholic am I; an' shure an' didn't ye see me yeresel' a nitin' mate on a Friday, an' a thankin' God for it too?"

I told him that I had forgotten about his eating the meat, but was glad to learn that he thanked God for it; and then I asked him:

"Then surely you believe in the Bible, Barney?"

"Ivery bit of it but just one sprig of a docthrin," said Barney.

"And what doctrine is that?" I asked.

"In shure an' doesn't the Bible say there is a hell?"

"Certainly it does, Barney; and you must believe that, else what would become of all the wicked people?"

"An' sorra a bit of a hell do I belave in at all," said Barney. "Hell isn't in it."

This was a peculiar form of speech with Barney; whenever he wished to say that there was no such a thing as this or that he would say: "This or that isn't in it." Thus, if he had wanted to say that there were no such things as ghosts—which, by the way, he would never have thought of saying after he had seen the scarecrow with the fireflies on it that we boys had frightened him so badly with the first night—he would not have said, "There are no such things as ghosts," but "Ghosts ain't in it." So at this time he kept saying: "Hell isn't in it, hell isn't in it. I'll niver belave that at all, at all."

I am afraid I wasn't a very good theologian at that early day, though I have sometimes thought that children are the best theologians in the world; and if theologians go to heaven we have pretty good authority for thinking so, for our Savior said, you know: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and he was talking about little children, and not about theologians. However, I did the best I could to convince him, and succeeded some days after, but not in the way I expected.

It happened, while we were talking, that a gray rabbit went running across the field and I commenced whistling. Barney burst out into a loud laugh.

"What are you laughing at, Barney?" said I.

"An' shure, Darlint," said he, "an' do ye think that lubber of a dog could come way from the house yonder before that hare could get out of the way?"

I told him it was not a hare, but a rabbit, and that I was not whistling for Buck, but for the rabbit itself; but he was too far off to hear me.

Barney didn't laugh any more, but I noticed that he seemed to look rather as though I had hurt his feelings; so I added:

"Indeed it is so, Barney."

"An' now, me honey," said he, "will ye niver lave off a playin' yere pranks on a poor fellow like me? Shure an' haven't I bin all me lolf a seein' the gintlemin a-huntin' the hare in Ould Ireland with the dogs, an' now in shure will ye be afther a tellin' me that they will come to ye for just the whistlin' av them?"

"No, they will not come to you, Barney; but if you are quite near them they will stop and sit up on their hind legs, and you can get a good shot at them, or even hit them with a stone."

Barney said very little more at the time, but I learned afterward that he got what I had told him about hell mixed up in his simple mind with my statements about rabbits, and it seems he concluded, in some very illogical manner, that if what I had told him about rabbits was true my statements about hell must be true also.

It happened, some days after this, that Barney was repairing a hedge on the boundary line of the farm, way out in the forest, or the "woods," as they call it in that country, and I again went to look at his work. I had nearly forgotten our conversation about rabbits, and was quite ignorant of the curious reasoning that had been going on in his mind. Well, while we were there another rabbit started up, and ran this time across the path, not more than ten feet from us. I at once commenced whistling, and sure enough the rabbit stopped and sat up, apparently charmed at the noise.

"Get a stone, Barney, quick," I called out, "and knock him over."

But Barney stood in silent amazement, and when at length the rabbit had got over the spell and scampered off he burst out with:

"Hell is in it, hell is in it. I'll believe that forever more." And thus Barney was converted.

But now, my little ones, here is mamma coming, and Tom has been aching to tell us about moles and rabbits and hares.

Shall we hear him to-morrow night?

"I don't believe, grandpa," says Harry, "that you will ever tell us about 'How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest.'"

Oh, yes, I will, my boy, whenever we get at it once; but now good-night. GRANDPA-GOODALE.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 4 feet 5 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixteenth instant:

Mississippi river and bayous	1,316
Red river	1,030
Ouachita river	55
Railroads	1,183
Lake	1
Mobile	288
Texas	576
Total	4,459

On Saturday the market opened inanimate, with only a limited inquiry and a tendency to still easier prices for all but good staple kinds, which were in limited supply and firm, but after the receipt of the 12.42 P. M. dispatch from New York, reporting an advance of ⅛c. in spots, factors assumed more confidence, and buyers were unable, unless in exceptional cases, to obtain any concessions. The tone of the market was also strengthened by the light receipts. The sales embraced 1,800 bales. On Monday the movement commenced with an improved demand, supposed to have been caused by the frost accounts, and up to noon 2,500 bales had changed hands at steady prices, after which there were further transactions to the extent of 2,700 bales, making a total of 5,200 bales. On Tuesday, notwithstanding discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York, the demand was quite active, and up to 1 P. M. 2,700 bales had changed hands, partly at previous rates, partly at easier prices, without any quotable variation, and partly at a falling off of ⅛c., after which there was no material change, the additional sales embracing 2,400 bales, making a total for the day of 5,300, and prices showing a good deal of irregularity and some weakness compared with Monday's business, the buoyancy which characterized that day's operations having almost entirely disappeared.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,400 bales, against 7,450 for the corresponding time last week and 17,000 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 935,871 bales, against 1,127,656 bales to the same date last year; and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 224,776 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 225,939—3,226,261 against 3,520,256. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, April 21.—Reports from sixty Ohio and thirty-one Indiana towns indicate a complete failure of peaches; the apples are slightly injured. Twenty-four towns report the wheat uninjured; twenty-two report a half crop; twelve no crop. Reports from twenty towns of western Pennsylvania indicate a half crop of wheat and fruit.

Reports from Michigan indicate great damage to the wheat and destruction to the peaches. The apples promise well. Plentiful rains may improve the peach crop.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—It is the general impression of those likely to be informed that the case known as the Grant parish case, involving the constitutionality of the enforcement act of May 31, 1870, will not be decided at this term, but the same authority asserts that a large majority of the court, if not all, are of the opinion that the act is unconstitutional. All the cases which have been argued at the present term, except this, it is thought, will be decided before the adjournment.

Attorney General Williams resigned, to take effect May 15. No successor named. Williams goes home, hoping to come back as senator from Oregon.

NEW YORK, April 23.—John Harper, senior partner of Harper Bros., is dead, aged seventy-nine years.

MEMPHIS, April 27.—The planters are complaining of the unprecedented destruction of mules, horses and cattle by the buffalo gnats. It is estimated that within the past ten days $100,000 worth of stock has been killed by them within a radius of one hundred miles from this city, and in consequence there has been a heavy advance in the price of mules and horses.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 12, via Havana, April 22.—The last session of the present Congress was opened by President Lerdo de Tejada with a speech. The President said the relations of Mexico with foreign powers were friendly. In accordance with the recent amendment to the constitution a Senate would be organized in September. The executive had fulfilled all the requirements of the constitutional amendment and the reform laws, but old prejudices and the spirit of bigotry still lingered.

Some persons, by artfully creating an unreasonable excitement, had occasion or pretext for the formation of small armed bands in Michoacan and Jalisco. They pretended to believe that Mexicans would allow themselves to be deprived of the glorious results of the victories they had purchased with their blood, and those ideas and principles whose incorporation in the constitution and laws of the country elevated the republic to a place among the most liberal and civilized people. The President stated that measures would be submitted making education compulsory, and providing for a normal college for female teachers.

LONDON, April 21.—The Duchess of Sutherland and the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans were present to-day at the revival services in the Haymarket, conducted by Moody and Sankey.

It is rumored that Bismarck has addressed a note to Luxemburg similar to those sent to Belgium.

BERLIN, April 23.—The police of Posen have notified the Ursulines Sisters who are not natives of Germany to leave the country within two months.

LONDON, April 25.—Moody and Sankey's revival meetings to-day were well attended. Among the distinguished persons present to-night were Mr. Gladstone and Lord Kennard.

MILITARY GOVERNMENT.—Appleton's Journal says: "In all our reading we have seen nowhere so illuminating a statement as that expressed in the following two sentences from the Nation: 'The only Southern communities in which perfect peace and order reign are those, like Virginia and Georgia, over which the whites have complete control, and with which the troops do not interfere. It is only in the States which the negroes are actually governing, and in which they have the whole force of the United States behind them, that the whites give complete rein to their love of murder and intimidation.'"

SOUTH CAROLINA BANDITTI OF THE OTHER SORT.—Says a Washington special of the twenty-first:

"Stories come to this city of a terrible series of outrages in the northern part of South Carolina. This time it is not the kind of outrages that the administration journals will care to make much of. The negroes have organized a regular band of plunderers, and they have murdered and robbed the farming people of the section in a style that will equal any of the first-class efforts so eloquently dwelt upon by the Attorney General's outrage department last fall."

IN REPLY to a petition from the Roman Catholic bishops, protesting against the recent ecclesiastical laws, the Emperor of Germany has expressed his regret that the bishops should cause a disturbance by defying laws which were always obeyed in other countries.

TWO of the Pittsburg Baptist churches have regularly appointed deaconesses.

Terrible Disaster.

Near four o'clock yesterday evening a fire broke out in the blacksmith shop of the steamboat John Kyle and in an incredibly short time enveloped the whole boat in flames.

Immediately upon the alarm being given, and the rapidity with which the fire was extending ascertained, the danger to boats in the immediate vicinity was appreciated, and B. F. Burch, mate of the Lessie Taylor, which was lying just above the Kyle, cut the lines of the latter, when the eddy carried her up for about two hundred feet, until she struck the Bodmann, which beat quickly caught on fire.

This boat was likewise cut loose, and the two floated directly against the steamer Exporter, to which the flames were communicated, whereupon some one, who is deserving the severest censure, to put the matter in its very mildest form, severed the moorings of that boat, and the three boats, all ablaze from stem to stern, were blown by the high wind prevailing to the middle of the stream.

When the Kyle and Bodmann were cut loose three persons on them rushed to the Exporter as soon as that boat was touched, hoping to escape thence to the landing; but some one, in the excitement of the moment, cut her loose with about one hundred people on board, who drifted out into the stream on the burning vessel.

In spite of every exertion the three boats continued to burn, the Bodmann and Exporter drifting over to the Algiers side, and the Kyle rapidly floating down the river about two miles, when she sank.

The unfortunates on the burning steamers were forced by the flames to jump into the river, and a most harrowing sight was presented to the view of the thousands of spectators who lined the levee. A number of men were seen clinging to the bows and sterns of the Bodmann and Exporter, while the surface of the river was alive with human beings struggling for existence.

There is no idea as to how many persons were lost, as the excitement was so great that no definite information could be obtained. The whole river was covered with skiffs, which were trying to save those who were overboard. Many stood hopefully huddled on the bow of the Exporter, thinking that relief would be extended them by the tugs that were plying in the immediate vicinity, but when the middle of the river was reached the fire became so hot that the half crazed creatures had to take to the water and many went down, while some few were saved by the exertions of the skiffs.

On board of the Exporter was Capt. Reese, the owner, from Pittsburg, who, with his family and a number of friends from that city, were here on a pleasure excursion. Fortunately the ladies of the excursion party on board of the Exporter were all ashore, except Mrs. Reese and daughter and one other lady. Mrs. Reese and the other lady were taken off by a skiff, but the daughter was probably drowned.

On the Bodmann there was an excursion party from Cincinnati, a great many of whom were in the city, visiting the sights.

The Exporter and Bodmann drifted to the Algiers shore, and there burned quite down, whereafter they were towed into the stream by a tug, and the wreck of the latter eventually landed at the Magee plantation, nine miles below the city.

The Kyle floated directly down the river, and was taken in charge by a tug after burning nearly to the water's edge.

The officers of the United States steamer Kansas and those of the steamship City of Merida dispatched their boats to the rescue of those persons in the water, and succeeded in saving quite a number of them.—New Orleans Bulletin, April 24.

The Extra Session.

The called session of the Louisiana Legislature ended on Saturday, April 24. The following bills were passed and await the action of the Governor:

SENATE BILLS ADOPTED BY THE HOUSE.

Senate bill No. 15, relative to the metropolitan police and the reduction of taxation. This bill reduces the annual expenditure from $600,000 to $490,000.

Senate bill No. 16, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the Insane Asylum."

Senate bill No. 84, an act for the relief of delinquent taxpayers from the payment of penalties in certain cases. This bill is somewhat ambiguous in its phrasing, and is held by some to apply only to the taxes due on overflowed lands by the floods of 1874, although the second section of the bill seems to grant, beyond a doubt, relief from penalties to all taxpayers who pay before November 1, 1875. The first section, which refers to taxes due on overflowed lands, gives until the first of December, one month later.

Senate bill No. 26, an act to amend act 73, of 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the City Council to levy a police tax, to regulate the levy of taxes," etc., finally passed.

Senate bill 37, an act supplemental to act 3, and to provide for testing, at the instance of any taxpayer, in the courts the validity of any items of State indebtedness. Passed. This bill makes the president of the Cotton Exchange and the president of the Board of Trade, in case such board be established by statute, members of the Funding Board, or Board of Liquidation, as it is technically known.

Senate bill No. 60, an act to renew and extend the charter of the Chamber of Commerce, was called up and finally passed.

Senate bill, an act to encourage the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods, was also passed.

Senate bill, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to empower the police jury of the parish of Plaquemines to issue bonds," was called up and finally passed.

Senate bill, an act to incorporate the town of Amite. Finally passed.

Senate bill, an act providing for appeals from the parish of Tangipahoa to the Supreme Court.

An act providing to expedite the construction of the Chattanooga railroad. Finally passed.

HOUSE BILLS ADOPTED BY THE SENATE.

House bill No. 14, to reduce the expenses of public printing, by restricting the publication of statutes of the State and official journals of the General Assembly to the official journal of the State. Passed.

House bill No. 24, relative to the protection of the fire department, was finally passed. This bill provides:

1. That any person convicted of giving a false alarm shall be fined $100, and be imprisoned not less than one nor more than three years in the parish prison.

2. That any unauthorized person being found with keys in his possession, or any one found defacing or injuring any part of the telegraph apparatus, shall, upon conviction, be fined $50, and imprisoned not less than three months nor more than six months in the parish prison.

3. Authorizing the chief engineer, in conjunction with the mayor of the city, to offer a reward of $100 or less for the apprehension of such offenders.

The House appropriation bill, appropriating $117,862 for the expense of the extra session, was passed. This includes the mileage and per diem of those who were not paid during the regular session just passed.

The House bill relative to the City Park. This bill reduces the amount to be expended annually from $165,000 to $85,000.

Attention, Mississippi Conference!

[redacted] allow me as secretary of the Mississippi Conference, and as treasurer of the Ministerial Educational Association, to call the attention of the members to the following resolution passed at their last session, viz.:

Resolved, That in view of bringing the subject of education more prominently before our people, we recommend that during the month of next May this subject be brought before our various congregations in such way as pastors may think best, and that on these occasions, and at the discretion of our ministers in charge, collections be made in every congregation to assist in the payment of the tuition of candidates for the ministry, within our bounds and attending our colleges, and that the funds so collected be transmitted at once to the treasurer of the Ministerial Educational Association.

We have eight choice young men at Centenary College preparing for the ministry; and while we by no means expect to charge them tuition, still we would be glad if the church would assist the professors of the college in this work they are doing so cheerfully for the benefit of the whole connection.

It is to be hoped that all our preachers in charge will carry out this resolution in its letter and spirit. They will thus advertise their colleges, bring the matter of education closer to their people, and secure material aid for the education of our young ministers.

International Sunday School Convention.

MR. EDITOR: Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of the committee on transportation, and Rev. George A. Peltz, of the committee on delegations, for the International Sunday School Convention to be held in Baltimore, Md., beginning May 11, have sent to me blank credentials for delegates from Louisiana and Texas, with instructions to issue them to properly accredited persons who may desire to attend.

Delegates may be sent from union Sunday school associations or from churches, or, where no such formal election is held, those desiring to attend can be furnished with credentials, which will secure to them reduced rates on the railroads and free entertainment while the convention lasts.

Be kind enough to mention the above in your paper, and state my address as Lock Box "B," New Orleans. Yours truly,

J. C. HARTZELL.

From the Work.

CARTHAGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The winter months were not favorable for church-going. Then came the rains and high water. So we have been hindered somewhat in our work. In looking around we find the general state of the church only tolerably good. The spiritual fire burns low; of course finances lower. But we have some old stand-by Methodists over here, and are glad to see some young ones following in their wake. May the Lord increase their number. Then we have some whose feet govern the head; or whose head cannot govern the feet. They will jump about. Mr. Editor, do church members dance in the cities?

Our first Quarterly Conference is just past. Owing to much water and other excuses we had but few officials out. In the absence of the presiding elder we took up a collection for missions, and received $7.90 in cash; some more promised.

We have lost, by death, one of our good men—Rev. W. S. Wingfield, who was engaged in teaching at Knox's school-house, in the bounds of this circuit. He died March 17. You have doubtless received an obituary notice.

We have no Sunday school organized yet.

I find a good many readers of the ADVOCATE here, and I am trying to get more; but money is very scarce; send you a little, and hope you will be able to keep cheery, and continue us a live paper.

L. P. MEADOR.

EDINBURG, April 16, 1875.

HAZLEHURST, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On taking charge of our church at this place after Conference I found that we were in debt about $800. We have paid $446.20 of that amount, and hope to settle the remainder soon. And just in this connection we wish to return thanks to the Wo[redacted]ciety and the Rev. C. B[redacted] of Jackson, for a remittance of $25; the brethren and Rev. R. J. Jones, of Canton, for $20; the brethren and Rev. J. Bancroft, of Vicksburg, for $12.50; and the brethren of Bethesda church, on the Georgetown circuit, for $25.

But I commenced to tell you of our missionary meeting. At our first Quarterly Conference it was resolved to hold a missionary meeting on the seventeenth and eighteenth of this month, and that we would invite the Rev. H. F. Johnson to address the people on that occasion. He came up, and on the evening of the seventeenth spoke in the interest of domestic missions, and on the morning of the eighteenth on the subject of foreign missions. We give the results of the collections, by subscription and otherwise, after the address on the morning of the eighteenth: For domestic missions, $81.80; for foreign missions, $81.50; making a total of $170.30. Our Sunday School Missionary Society has paid $20.20 for foreign missions, which gives us a grand total of $190.50, and the society will continue to contribute to the end of the year.

One sister, whose name I am not allowed to give, came to me and said that that was the fifteenth birthday of her son, and, though she had given $5, she wished to take $2.50 worth of stock in the foreign missionary cause for her son as a birthday gift. May God bless the dear Christian mother, and call her son to a high and faithful ministry in his church. How many Christian mothers will imitate this example?

That Word About the Sabbath.

MR. EDITOR: I do heartily thank you for your earnest words on the Sabbath, for I tell you line upon line is what we much need now upon that subject. As you say, a wonderful slackness has obtained among the people, and by the people—I mean professors of religion. I cannot see nor understand the necessity that is laid upon a woman professing to have found the all-satisfying fruit of the Spirit to fix up on Sabbath evening—baby, buggy, dog, husband, and all—and start out just as if it was Monday. I look at such a professor in wonder. I wonder: Haven't you read the Bible, and is not God's word plain as daylight on that subject?

When God said, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honorable, and shalt honor him, not doing thy own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words"—I think it is so plain that none need go astray nor be in doubt on this all-important truth. When we keep the Sabbath thus, in the letter and in the spirit, we may expect the promised blessing, and not until then. I have observed another way—that is, attend the midday service of your own church, go home, eat a good dinner, and as you are already fixed up, and the time hangs heavy, walk to the "Catholic" church. It is Easter with them perhaps, or some other high-day, and they are going through the unending round of semi-heathen Christian ceremonies and follies, leading the poor untutored, unfurnished mind and heart away from the true God, and fixing it on pictures and music and crosses and holy water, and other things too numerous to mention, that bring no rest to the mind, no purity to the heart. And often their first words, on getting back, are: "Why, it is as good as a theater." Now is a theater a good place for a professor at any time, and especially on Sabbath evening? May almighty God, through his ministry and his awful providences, stir the people up to see and to feel that his law is just and honorable and holy. Oh, my soul, what ponderous things are God's broken laws! With what crushing, grinding weight they fall on the Christ-forgetting man!

ANNA M. GRANADE.

FORT SMITH, ARK., April 15, 1875.

REV. JOSEPH CARSON, a veteran of the Virginia Conference, died April 15. The Richmond Christian Advocate says:

He was over ninety years of age, and for above seventy years has been a preacher of the gospel. God blessed him with a physical constitution of uncommon vigor, and with a clear and strong intellect, so that he was able to preach the word with power to the last days of his earthly life. He had thousands of seals to his ministry, and among them were many who entered the ministry, some of whom still live to wield the sword of truth which has now fallen from the nerveless hand of the dead veteran.

To the last Father Carson was genial, cheerful, loving and zealous in his Master's work. Nearly all his early friends had entered the eternal city before him, but now he is with them, and has joined in the song of the white-robed throng before the throne of the Lamb. We shall look for a full memoir of Father Carson from a competent hand.

THE faculty of the University of Virginia on the first of April elected the Rev. R. J. McBride, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, chaplain for the two years commencing October 1, 1875—the time the chaplaincy of the Rev. S. A. Steele, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, expires. It is, we believe, the custom, if not the law, to elect the chaplains biennially, in rotation from the four leading denominations in Virginia—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal.

THE Rev. J. W. Butler, son of Dr. Butler and one of his assistants in the Mexican mission, says the Methodist, "preached his first sermon in Spanish on the twenty-first of February, and did well. Mr. —— Drees, another young man, had commenced earlier, and now that Mr. Stevens has arrived and is preaching in Spanish there is new life and joy in the mission."

THE success of the revival mission of Mr. Pearsall Smith in Berlin and other towns in Germany is increasing. Immense crowds attend the meetings, and members of the nobility occupy seats on the platforms. The Empress Augusta has given a private audience to Mr. Smith.

WHAT did the spider do when he came out of the ark? He took a fly and went home.

Hard to Please.

Mr. Spurgeon recently lectured on "Candles." From a report of the lecture in a London paper we clip this spicy item:

"A long, ornamented candle in a showy candlestick having been placed on the table with some others less pretentious, neither of them being lighted, the lecturer observed that those grandees were in that condition worth nothing compared with their friend, the rushlight (here a burning rushlight was held up.) That rushlight was much to be preferred to what was without the living flame. A living dog was better than a dead lion, and the lighted rushlight was better than the biggest candlestick filled with the best wax that gave no light. Some persons were born on the wrong day or in the wrong age to be of any use. One gentleman fancied that he might have been an Oliver Cromwell; and as an Oliver Cromwell was not wanted in his time, he became a loafer on his father and mother. If such a person was set up in business he soon came down again. He was like a candle which had too fine a candlestick, the truth being that it was not the candlestick but the candle that was wrong. He had had a member of his church who had previously left the Church of England, as he told him, because he disliked the prayer-book, who then joined the Wesleyans, and left them because they ranted, who next went to the Presbyterians, and left them because they were high and dry, and who then came to the Baptists. If a man who joined the Baptists could not be satisfied, nothing more could be done with him. That man, however, said they were the most bigoted and quarrelsome set he ever met with. From them he went to the Independents, and the last time that he heard of him he was a Plymouth brother. According to him he might have been a useful man but for his bad surroundings. He (Mr. Spurgeon) had his doubts as to the correctness of that view, for he had known people do good in all churches."

SERMON BY A CENTENARIAN.—Father Boehm, says the Northern Christian Advocate, whom everybody knows who has read the papers, and who will be one hundred years old next June, on the eighth day, preached at the Newark Conference, N. J., on the second day of April last. His sermon was ten minutes long (text, Nahum i, 7,) and Bishop Janes said: "The text is one of the most sweet and precious in the Holy Bible; the exposition of it has been clear and forcible, though brief. To my mind the sermon has two especial excellencies; one is, it was preached and not read, and the other is that it was brief, and the preacher stopped when he got done—a beautiful example to us in those two respects, and I propose to profit by them. One of the most remarkable things in the character and history of our Father Boehm is that he has not reached his second childhood. He is just as manly as he ever has been in any period of his past history, and his mental powers are preserved to him in their strength, in their harmony, and in their adaptation to the office and work in which he has spent his long and holy life."

Probation.—One of the special excellencies of the sermon, according to the Bishop, was its brevity (ten minutes,) and should be imitated. If a man who has been preaching sixty years preaches but ten minutes, how long should a Bishop preach who has been preaching twenty years, thirty years, forty years, or an ordinary man who has preached ten years or five years? Father Waldo, a Congregational minister, preached after he was an hundred years old. He lived, we believe, to be one hundred and two years. We have before us a written sermon of his, prepared when an old man. The penmanship is plain and correct, and the thought consecutive and clear. He lived and died in Syracuse.

THE Baltimore Christian Advocate, April 10, says: "We know it will be gratifying to our readers to see the name of the Rev. B. W. Bond announced as editorial contributor to this paper. The name of Bond sounds very familiar as connected with an Advocate. It has been a tower of strength. Bro. Bond is a nephew of the late Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Bond, and a member of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. He has already obtained a literary position as the writer of an able essay on missions, issued by the Nashville Publishing House, and we are certain his editorials will be interesting to our readers."

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS.—A large number of ministers and members of the several harmonizing churches in Nashville, with a miscellaneous multitude, assembled on Sunday afternoon at the Exposition building, and held a public service preparatory to the operations of Messrs. Whittle and Bliss. The Young Men's Christian Association appointed a committee to meet those gentlemen on their arrival from Louisville, and escort them to the Maxwell House. Committees have been appointed from the various churches to act as ushers, etc., during the meeting.—Nashville Christian Advocate, April 24.

A LIVELY LADY, when the subject of "strong-minded women" was being discussed, made this remark: "I notice that those 'women's rights' people are invariably men's 'left.'"

CHRIST IN US.

Christ in us our hope of glory—
Ever loved and faithful story!
God the Son came down to die,
To raise our thoughts to him on high;
His work the soul's salvation wrought it,
By his own precious blood was bought it;
Received by those who own his word,
Who humbly trust in Christ their Lord.

There is no other name above
That name of names, o'er God of love;
To Jesus' name each knee shall bow,
In heaven above and earth below.
No other way by which we can
Be saved but by the Son of man—
The Son of God, who came to die
For sinners such as you and I.

We come, oh, blessed Lord and Christ,
We will rejoice with all our might
In that salvation full and free,
And praise thee through eternity.
Oh, make us pure and holy, free
From every sin, thine own to be;
Our neighbor as ourself to love;
Grant us these blessings from above.

Sabbath School Address.

(The Rev. John Wilkinson was one of the chosen speakers to deliver an address at the Sunday school anniversary of the New Orleans district Sunday schools on Sunday, April 11. The address is here given as it was prepared by the lamented author, and as read at the anniversary three or four days after his death.—EDITOR.)

Boys and Girls of the Sabbath Schools of the New Orleans District: I have been requested to address you on this anniversary occasion, and the only drawback to the gladness which I feel in so doing is the fear that I may not be able to interest and profit you as much as the occasion demands. I assure you, however, that in coming before you to address you to-day I do covet earnestly the best gift of speaking, for it is your right to have the best; but I cannot promise you that the measure of my coveting has yielded me an equal measure of the gift. Indeed I may as well be frank with you at once, and so I say unto you as Peter said to the man at the gate of the temple who sat there looking up into his face expecting to receive something from him: "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give thee."

While sitting here, looking at you all coming in, class after class, Sabbath school after Sabbath school, until you have fairly filled this spacious sanctuary of the Lord, I have felt myself inwardly exclaiming, again and again: "What a glorious sight!" I am reminded of an incident of the celebrated banker—Rothschild. During the Peninsular war—the war waged by England against France to maintain the independence of Spain about sixty years ago—it became necessary to keep an immense amount of money in a great vault at Madrid; there was so much privateering going on upon the high seas that the English government could not risk sending the funds to pay the troops and other expenses of the war from month to month; and so several millions' worth of gold coin—sufficient to carry on the war for a long time—was accumulated in this one vault, where it was kept secret and securely guarded. Rothschild, then the greatest banker in London, was in the secret, of course; and he sent a special request to the King of England that he might be allowed to look on the gold in the vault at Madrid, just to see so much money in one place. The King granted his request; he was admitted into the vault, the great boxes of money were opened before him one after another; and when he saw the vast quantity of glittering coin, all bearing the sterling stamp of England, he burst out with this exclamation: "That is a glorious sight!" To his eye, money dealer that he was, it was truly "a glorious sight." But what are gold coins stamped with the image and superscription of King George compared to human souls stamped with the image and superscription of King Jesus! Upon the forehead of every child born into the world the Savior King hath written with his redeeming blood: "My lambi Of such is the kingdom of heaven." When I see crowding the courts of the Lord young souls having the stamp and superscription of the King of heaven legible upon their foreheads, have I not far greater reason than Rothschild had in the case just mentioned to exclaim: "That is a glorious sight! That is a glorious sight!"

But the chief glory of this sight, as in that of the British coin, is not in what you are sitting there in all the radiance of youth, but what you may be in the service of your King. If Rothschild were a patriot, as well as a banker, the chief glory of the sight of so much British gold in the vault at Madrid must have been in the thought that each of those glittering coins was capable of rendering noble service to the King of England. And certainly to me the chief glory of the sight of so many of you here to-day is in the thought that each of you is capable of rendering noble service to the King of heaven—even the Lord our God.

You often sing: "I want to be an angel, and with the angels stand." That precisely is what God created you to be. But what are angels? Beautiful shadowy creatures who are forever flitting about the throne of heaven like so many celestial butterflies, or those who are gorgeously appareled and live delicately in kings' courts? Not a bit of it. The poets and painters who tell us so have never read their Bibles, I fear. Angels are beautiful—exceedingly beautiful, it is true; but it is the beauty of majesty and power, for the Bible represents them as "excelling in strength"—"strong as fire and swift as the wind." But what are angels? Splendid musicians, whose main employment is harping upon harps day and night? No doubt they play and sing a great deal, as all happy people do; but no doubt they do most of their singing—they make most of their music—while busy at work, as all sensible people do; no doubt they carry harps in their hands, and praise God day and night; but I imagine the harp most often in their hands is some work which God has given them to do, and that it is by the doing of it they most proclaim the glory of God. But what are angels? The word angel has not one idea about a wing or a song in it, about beauty or music in it. It is a word that is packed full of the idea of work—real, earnest work. Angels are God's mightiest workers—they are his messengers, his ministers—to execute his will throughout the universe; they are his agents to make manifest his wisdom and power and goodness on a scale immeasurably greater than do the sun and moon and stars of the heavens, which declare the glory of God. We are not to suppose that God does everything himself. No, no. He works by others—through other intelligent beings whom he hath created to be workers together with himself. These workers together with God are his angels, his ministering spirits. Unto one he saith, "Go," and he goeth; and to another, "Come," and he cometh. So much of his wisdom and power do they possess, and so prompt are they to do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his word, that he has but to speak and it is done, he has but to command and it stands fast. They are his architects, his painters, his sculptors, his chemists, and the like, by whom he carries on all the manifold works in his great kingdom. We know that when the corner-stone of this earth was laid the angels were present and shouted for joy—for joy, no doubt, that they were being set to work on so magnificent a task as building a new world. The angels also constitute the armies of heaven—the hosts of the Most High; they are the great chieftains and soldiers by whom God makes war against the adversaries of his government, and by whom "he executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed." David tells us that the war chariots of God are twenty thousand—even many thousands of angels. The angels are also God's messengers of mercy and blessing to the inhabitants of his empire—they are his physicians, guardians, guides, heralds, counselors, whom he sends forth to "minister to them who are heirs of salvation." Yes, angels are God's chief workers. Not St. Paul, not Martin Luther, not John Wesley—great, earnest, untiring laborers in the service of God that they were—ever did more true work than angels are constantly doing. The truth of it is, angels are God's great, grand, glorified workers—his crowned workmen—those whom he has crowned with the everlasting dignity and honor and glory of reigning with him—working together with him in his eternal kingdom. The difference between an angel and a saint is that the one is crowned as a worker together with God for eternity, while the other is an heir to that crown, but not yet crowned. Now all men do not become angels, but all may become angels. The Bible tells us that all who do the will of God on earth shall be accounted worthy by and by to wear the crown of an angel in heaven—that they shall be joined to the innumerable company of angels—joined to them as one of them, just as when the drilled recruit is joined to the main body of the army. It is just as true that as many of you as remember your Creator in the days of your youth, and make it your meat and drink to do his will as best you can, that you are on your way to be angels of God in the eternal kingdom, as that you are on your way, as boys and girls, to be men and women in this temporal kingdom. Oh, my dear young friends, it is because I recognize you as a multitude of angels in their minority that my heart keeps on exclaiming in respect to you: "What a glorious sight!"

You all want to be angels, don't you? Well, now is your time to learn the art of serving God as an angel; and the very best thing you can do is to apprentice yourself to Jesus. Jesus is the great angel-maker. He says that when his disciples—his apprentices—are transferred to the eternal kingdom "they are equal to the angels" already there—they at once take rank among the best workers of God in heaven. The Sabbath school is one of Christ's workshops; from it he has added many an angel to the company in heaven. I am glad to see you all in this workshop of Jesus. It gives me strong hope that many of you will be crowned with the crown of angelhood after awhile. But let me tell you, right here, that there are three qualities you must have before you can be crowned as an angel of God—a pure heart, a mind to learn what God would have you to know, and a will to do what God would have you to do. The pure heart is necessary, because God does not associate himself with the impure; he can have no fellowship with those who are evil; only "the pure in heart shall see God," or dwell with him or work with him in his eternal kingdom. His angels are called holy ones, so pure are they. To be an angel of God you must, then, be holy as God is holy. To be holy is to be free from sin—it is to have a soul white and clean, without a stain of sin upon it. What color is this rose? White, clear white. This is just like a soul when it is made free from the guilt of sin. What is the color of this? Pink, light rose. This is the color of little children's souls when they first begin to do wrong—when they get a little angry, or take some trifling things not their own. What color is this? Black red. When children get worse and worse—get very mad, tell lies and steal—their souls take on a darker shade of red; and when they grow up to be drunkards and swearers and blasphemers and murderers, and such like, then their souls become a black red, like this—black with the guilt of sin. You see, every time you do anything that is wrong, your soul becomes redder and darker; you are no longer white and clean, and you are therefore not fit to be angels. And what must you do to get a pure heart—a soul white like snow—when you know that you have been doing wrong, and therefore have not such a heart now. What must you do? Try to do better? Look at this red cloth—can it get itself white? No. Can you wash it white? No. Can you fade it out white? No. It will be a dirty red always. So with your soul. You may stop sinning, so as not to make it any darker than it is, but you cannot make your soul white. If it is [redacted] to the dye of sin again it will become no darker, but its present stain will last always. What, then, can make you white and clean? "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "Though your sins be as scarlet, Christ can make you white as snow." Then the first thing to do, if you would be an angel, is to go to Jesus, that you may have your soul washed in that blood of the Lamb which cleanses every guilty stain away.

And what is the second quality you must have in order to become an angel? A mind to learn what God would have you to know? The main difference between an angel and a bird is not a difference in their size and beauty, not a difference in the loudness and melody of their songs, but in that God hath made angels to know more than the fowls of the air. Some time ago a little fellow named Cyrus, who lived on a farm, had a city cousin to come and visit him in the summer season. The city boy wore the nicest sort of clothes—clothes of fancy colors and fashionable make. Little Cyrus wore nothing but the plainest sort of clothes. After these two boys had played together all day, and were undressing themselves for bed at night, the city cousin said: "Cyrus, don't you wish you could have as good clothes as I have?" "No, Joe, I don't," was the prompt reply. "It ain't the clothes that make a man—it's the know." Cyrus was right. Neither is it the grand wings or the fine song or the bright raiment that make an angel—it's the know—it is the wisdom which they possess. And an angel would be no wiser than the fowls of the air if he did not learn wisdom from God, for God is the fountain of all true wisdom. But God does not make known his wisdom to any one who has not a mind to learn it. What engineer would care to teach an apprentice the art of engineering if the apprentice did not want to learn from him? You have read about little Samuel—how the Lord came to him one night to give him the wisdom of a prophet. But did you ever notice that the Lord did not give him the wisdom until Samuel first said: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." It is a great thing, children, to have a hearing ear for the word of God—that is, an ear eager to learn what God has to say to us. Oh, if you would be wise as an angel of God you must cultivate the habit of sitting at the feet of Jesus, who is to us the great revealer of the wisdom of God, saying, like Samuel: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

What is the third quality which an angel of God must have? A will to do what God wants you to do? Did you ever know a boy to become a good writer or a girl to become a good musician who was always wanting to have his or her own way in doing things, and was not willing to do just as the teacher directed? What general would want a soldier in his army who was not disposed to obey orders? One morning, not long since, a little fellow named Johnnie came home from Sunday school so impressed with the lovable character of Jesus that he told his Aunt Grace he was going to try to be good hereafter, to please the Lord Jesus. "And," says he, "I am going to Sunday school next time without mother making me." When next Sunday came Johnnie was ready to go to Sabbath school long before the bell began to ring. But just as he was about to start there was a rumble of thunder in the sky, and his mother, looking out, saw it was going to rain very soon. "There's going to be a storm, Johnnie," said she. "You can't go to Sabbath school this morning." "But, mother, I want to go so much." "I am sorry, dear; but you are not very well, and I would not dare to expose you to that rain this morning." "You're too bad," said Johnnie, getting angry and beginning to cry, "and I'll go anyhow." "You will go up stairs," said his mother, "till you can behave better." Johnnie was marched up stairs, sobbing with passion. He ran into his Aunt Grace's room and cried out: "Oh, auntie, I want to be good and go to Sunday school, but mother won't let me." "Come here, Johnnie," said she, "and I will tell you a story. Once upon a time there was a great king who had an immense country to govern. He was very good, and all his subjects loved him, except in one little corner of his kingdom, where was a very wicked prince, who persuaded the people to rebel against the king; this wicked prince told the people they would be much happier if they would follow him; but as soon as they were in his power he treated them dreadfully; he put them in prison and starved them, and beat them, until many of them died from their sufferings. The good king heard of all this, and he was so sorry for his unhappy subjects that he determined to go and fight the bad prince who had deceived them. Well, the battle took place, and the king defeated the prince and wounded him [redacted] never recovered; [redacted] suffered terribly [redacted] so that all the people in that country who had any gratitude in their hearts were amazed at the king's goodness in fighting for them; and when he called for volunteers from among them to join his army in carrying on the war against those towns which the enemy's forces still held, many of them joined the ranks. Among others there came, one day, to the king a little boy who said he wanted to be in his army too. Then the king, who was very fond of children, smiled and said he was welcome; and he placed him in the hands of one of his generals to learn to be a soldier. 'General,' said the little boy, 'I would like to be a drummer.' 'Not to-day,' said the general. 'Stay here and wait for orders.' 'If I can't be a drummer I'll go home—it's too bad,' said the foolish child. 'My poor little fellow,' said the general with a mild voice, 'do you want to serve the king so much, and don't you know that the only way to do it is to obey orders? If my orders seem strange, that makes no difference; you are the soldier, not the general; my directions will seem all right to you some day. What you need most to learn now is to obey orders, whether they are what you prefer or not?' The boy thought awhile; he saw he was wrong in wanting his own way; that he could never be a soldier in that way. So he asked the general's pardon, and ever after was willing to obey orders.

"What do you think of my story?" said Aunt Grace when she had finished. "I think it means me in some way, auntie, but I don't know exactly how. Am I the foolish little boy that would not stay if he could not be a drummer?" "What do you think about it? You want to please King Jesus because he had fought and overcome the wicked one who had deceived the people of this world into rebellion against the best of kings; you reported to the King for duty in his army; he placed you in charge of one of his generals—your good mother—saying to you: 'Obey your parents.' You wanted to go to Sunday school; your mother, for excellent reasons, told you no, not to-day—wait for orders. Then what?"

Johnnie hung his head, but in a moment he brightened up, saying: "Auntie, I would like to be a soldier of the Lord." "Then," said Aunt Grace, "you must do as his generals say, even if you see, or think you see, a hundred better ways of serving him."

Yes, my dear young friends, if you would be soldiers of the Lord—angels of God—you must have a will to do what he wants you to do. You must have a will to wait for orders, and to obey orders; and this you must learn here below by not following your own will, but the will of God, as it is made known to you by Christ, and by those whom he hath appointed over you in the family and in the church. Oh, it is a grand quality to have a will to do what God wants us to do. There's no other way to reach the angel's crown than by practicing yourselves on earth in doing the will of God after the example of Jesus. Indeed to the extent you do the will of God here below you are already the angels of God, though not yet crowned. There is a great deal of angel work all around you, in which you can practice your hands before you get to heaven.

"If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say he died for all.

"If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead some other children
To the Savior's waiting arms."

I have heard of a little girl named Lottie, who had been reading in her Bible how God wanted us to visit the sick and the prisoners, and so forth. She turned to her mother, saying: "Ma, I cannot go to see prisoners, but may be I might go to see some sick person. Do you know any I might go to see?" "Why, yes, child, there's poor old Mrs. Williams—she would be glad to see you." Lottie went right away and gathered some lovely flowers, and took them to the sick woman, and chatted with her some time in her own sweet, simple way. The old lady was charmed beyond measure. Little Lottie's visit was a real ministry of God's cheering sunshine to her soul. "I cannot thank you enough, Miss Lottie," said the sick woman, when the child was leaving, "not only for your gifts, but for your company."

I have heard of another little girl—Bertie, I think, was her name—that had a good deal of the angel in her. She had been listening to a talk from the superintendent, explaining how children could be doing God's work for the neglected little folks that lived all around them. Said she to her teacher, her little face fairly sparkling with the joy she felt in the thought of being able to do something in God's service: "I can't give lots of money, and I can't sew cloaks and gowns for poor children just yet. But [redacted] do—I can highway and hedge 'em." "What is that, my dear?" asked the teacher. "Why," says she, "it's coaxing poor children and naughty children into Sunday school. I can't 'splain it to you, but I know just how, for the superintendent told us. And I am going to do it." Why it seems to me that dear child was ready right then and there to be translated to heaven, and to be crowned as an angel of God.

Boys and girls, if you want to become angels, think of Lottie and Bertie, and go then and do likewise. Try to do just as much real angel work as you can while you are in this world. Go to Jesus, asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and rest assured of it you won't want for something to do. There is a story in some history of a young prince who, though poor and unknown—a stranger in a strange land—felt always upon his brow the pressure of a crown. My dear young friends, seek earnestly to possess the three qualities I have referred to; and though, like that prince, you may be poor and little and unknown, like him you, too, will always feel upon your brow the pressure of a crown—not, however, as in his case, the corruptible crown of the son of an earthly king, but the incorruptible crown of a glorified son of God—a crown that shall shine resplendent as the stars of heaven forever and ever—a crown of surpassing honor and dignity, and glory and power—even the crown of an angel of God in heaven.

And now every one of you who wants to become worthy of that crown which the Lord Jesus shall give in the great day of his appearing unto all them that love his service, join with me in singing that most familiar of all Sunday school hymns:

"I want to be an angel,
And with the angels stand,
A crown upon my forehead," etc.

Dr. RIGG, in a letter to the New York Christian Advocate, speaking of the late Luke Wiseman, says: "No doubt Dr. Punshon will succeed him at the Mission House, and it is expected that Dr. Punshon will also succeed him at the Recorder's helm after Conference. Mr. Gervase Smith, the president's bosom friend, is likely, I believe, to manage that paper in the interval. It will cost him no pain to give way to his friend, or to hold office as his locum tenens. During his year of presidency Dr. Punshon could not give time to the paper, and of course he can only be appointed to the Mission House by the Conference. What Kensington station, just now risen for the first time into vitality and promise, will do if he should be taken from it at Conference, I find it hard to imagine."

Obituaries.

MRS. ALZADA ROBERTS, daughter of J. Roberts, and wife of William O. Spencer, both deceased, was born July 12, 1818, and died of pneumonia, February 20, 1875, aged fifty-six years, seven months and eight days. Sister Spencer was converted to God at the old Shiloh Methodist church, in Yazoo county, during a revival meeting in the summer of 1838. She soon after joined the communion of that church, and from that day up to her death was found upon the Lord's side, an active, useful and humble follower of Jesus. Truthfully may we say of her: She "walked with God." The deep, cold waters of affliction often dashed over her consecrated soul, but she was always calm and kept the faith. Out of ten children, six preceded her to the spirit land, and were doubtless among the saints who welcomed our sister home to rest. In 1865, just as the adversities of the war were being most keenly felt by the South, Sister Spencer was called upon to give up a devoted and loving husband—a sacrifice peculiarly great at that time, as many realized. Besides all this, for about thirty-four years Sister Spencer was a great bodily sufferer; and though not confined to her bed, yet she was truly an invalid. But amid the darkest night she never complained against the love or goodness of God, "nor charged God foolishly." Therefore it is not to be wondered at that she was ready when the messenger of death came and said: "It is enough." She died as she had lived—a Christian. To the orphaned children we would say: "Follow your mother as she followed Christ, and all will be well with you;" to the relatives and friends what St. Paul said to the Thessalonians: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

RICHLAND CIRCUIT, March 24, 1875.

IN MEMORY of JOHN W. CARTER, who was born in Wilcox county, Ala., in 1838; married to Miss Emma Carter, November 11, 1868, and died in the same county, of consumption, January 25, 1875.

The subject of this memoir did not enjoy the advantages of wealth and education in youth, but, being of an ambitious disposition, he began early and toiled industriously to take an honorable stand among men. He was a very positive man in his character, always seen to be true to his profession and principles; hence in his early day he obtained the confidence, respect and hearty good will of all, high and low. Having all the elements of an honest, upright man and gentleman, he was at no loss to secure the friendship of all classes alike. His own appreciation of honor and integrity gave him strong prejudices with regard to men—he respected an honest, good man, while he could not tolerate one thought to be otherwise. He early appreciated and espoused Christian virtues and morals; and, to say the least of him, he was an exemplary man.

The Methodist Church was to him the true embodiment of gospel religion; and without ostentation, show or boast, he was "an intelligent Methodist." His religion was a deep-seated principle, moving the man to an observance of: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." I think he came as near doing this as any man I ever knew, and through as pure motives; and now that he is gone, his neighbors and friends can more readily see him as he moved among them. In his community one feels impressed that death or some other blighting visitor has passed through. In the church this steward of God and the preacher cannot be seen or heard. His place at the communion and financial tables is vacant; it is felt by pastor and flock. In the grange the treasurer is gone, and all have repaired in a body to his resting-place and planted the "memorial tree" as an evidence of patrons' respects. The writer knew him, through the changes of several years, as a business man, a church man, a neighbor and a friend. Trusted and tried in these several relations, he and to the last he was the same—a good, true man. He turned his attention to the cultivation of the soil as a lifelong employment. In this channel he toiled right on until fortune saw, approved and smiled upon his honest efforts to do and be. He was a very industrious man, and often, very often taxed his physical powers, being constitutionally consumptive; and no doubt but this, in the prime of active manhood, hastened him to the chambers of death.

I offer to his bereaved wife and fatherless little ones all the sympathy and comfort of a true friend, praying: "God bless them abundantly on earth, and save them all eventually in heaven."

JOHN JONES AND I.

BY CHARLES G. AMES.

We had a tiff. "John Jones," said I,
"You shouldn't leave your cow nt large!"
"You mend your fence!" was his reply;
And so ran charge and counter-charge.

A trifling thing: the cow had cropped
Some blades of grass, some heads of grain;
And yet for this a friend I dropped,
And wrought for both a lasting pain.

I know that I had played the fool,
Yet thrust my better thought aside,
And, when my blood had time to cool,
Became a greater fool through pride.

Upon two homes a shadow sate;
Two cordial wives grew shy and cool;
Two broods of children learnt to hate;
Two parties grew in church and school.

John Jones' pew was next to mine;
What pleasant greetings passed between!
As sacred as the bread and wine
Had our communing friendship been.

Oft had our voices swelled the song,
Oft had we bowed in common prayer,
And shared the worship of the throng
Who sat in heavenly places there.

But how shall souls in exile sing
The Lord's sweet song? The holy notes
Of fellowship and joy and peace
And pardon stuck in both our throats.

Some lessened relish for all good
Made life for both to deaden down;
And nature darkened to our mood,
And answered back our settled frown.

One summer eve I sat and smoked;
Good Doctor Dean came riding by:
He said, in a voice a little choked:
"John Jones is hurt, and like to die."

A sudden fire shot through my brain,
And burned, like cow, the sophist lies;
And on my heart a sudden pain
Fell, like a bolt from hidden skies.

I stumbled o'er the threshold where
My shadow had not passed for years;
I felt a shudder in the hand
A woman gave me through her tears.

When he no more the pulse could feel,
I saw the doctor turn away;
Some mighty impulse made me kneel
Beside the bed, as if to pray.

Yet not the Maker's name I called;
As one who plunges 'neath the wave,
A swimmer, strong and unappalled,
Intent a drowning life to save—

So all my soul's up-gathered powers,
In anguish of desire intense,
Sent that departing one a cry
That leaped the abyss of broken sense.

Back to the dim eye came a ray;
O'er the white face a faint smile shone;
I felt, as 'twere a spirit's touch,
The stiffened fingers press my own.

O resurrection power of God
Which wrought that miracle of pain!
From buried hearts tore off the shroud,
And made dead friendship live again!

Beside one grave two households stood,
And, weeping, heard the pastor say:
"That out of death He brings to life,
And out of darkness cometh day."

Was I chief mourner in the train?
Ah, who could guess, of all the throng,
The strange, sweet comfort in the pain
Of one who mourns forgiven wrong?

GERMANTOWN, Pa.

The Papists in Spain.

Popery in Spain began in the fourth century, with Osius of Cordova. Although this bishop in nowise played, at the Council of Nice, the role which the fanciful historians of Ultramontanism attribute to him; although he did not preside over this council, and was not the Bishop of Rome's delegate to it, still it was he who, at the Council of Sardica, proposed the appeal to the Bishop of Rome. This zeal for the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome did not preserve him from the grave error he committed in signing the second formula of Sirmium. Happily he repented and returned to the confession of the true faith. Let us hope that this bishop, who represents so well, in his own person, the errors of the Spanish Church, will likewise represent the return of this same church to the true Christian faith.

Even in his own time Alcuin severely blamed the Spanish heresies. What would he not say to day of the condition of this church? It is she, without doubt, who gave birth to the symbol of Saint Athanasius. Although the doctrine of this symbol may be worthy of respect, yet was it necessary to express it by a symbol of faith, and to present it to the world as if it were not only a theological but also a dogmatic doctrine? We may consider, especially to-day, that it was not profitable.

It was also a Spanish council, the fourth of Toledo, which replaced the trine immersion in baptism by a single one, and which seriously modified that apostolic rite, the symbolical signification of which is so instructive and so divine. It was in Spain that they began to introduce into the symbol of Nicea-Constantinople the celebrated addition of the Filioque, the cause of so many troubles.

It is a great and difficult question to decide who was the real author of the collection of Forged Decretals known under the name of Isidore Mercator. Whether the author was from Rome or from the banks of the Rhine, whether one or many, it is probable that Spain contributed to it for her own part, and that they have placed this collection under the name of Isidore not without reason, whether they mean Isidore of Seville or Isidore of Badajos. Still upon this point the Spanish, together with the Roman Church, has injured the universal church in no small degree.

Every one knows how much the doctrine of the Immaculate conception was preached and favored in Spain. It was in Spain that the Jesuitical usage began of invoking Immaculate Mary before the sermon. It was Spain, moreover, which gave to the world Dominic de Guzman, Ignatius Loyola, the Carmelite Theresa, Jean de la Croix, etc. We shall surprise no one when we assert that the Spanish Dominicans, with their tribunals of the Inquisition, have done immense harm to the Christian cause. Neither Las Casas nor Bartholemy, who were martyrs, nor Melchior Cano, nor several other eminent Dominicans of Spain, can make us forget the bloody horrors wrought by their barbarous confreres. And the cruelties committed in Spain, what were they in comparison with those which Spanish pretended Christians committed in America? The pagans whom they persecuted were a thousand times more upright and Christian than themselves.

As to the Jesuits, their history is well known, notably that of the Spanish Jesuits, from Escobar to Sanchez, those two infamous moralists who have perverted more consciences than the misled honest men in the Society of Jesus have practiced virtues. The Spanish mystics are no better than the theologian inquisitors and the Jesuit moralists of the same country. Their eccentricities, more or less sentimental; their penances, as false as ridiculous, have done great harm to real piety. We venture to assert that monasticism in Spain has been worse than that in Italy.

In short, this church, which nevertheless has had its moments of greatness, and which has numbered within its fold true Christians, has ended by becoming a mere mixture of incredulity, ignorance, skepticism, superstition, immorality and cruelty. No church has been more papistical, more devoted to Rome and the Roman congregations, and no church has been less Christian. Some time before his death M. DeMontalembert wrote a work on Catholicism in Spain. But his heirs refuse to publish it, in spite of Montalembert's wish, formally expressed, that it should be published. They fear the hatred of the Jesuits and the thunders of Rome; they are afraid, above all, to give the proof that Montalembert did not die a Vatican papist. And yet in this work he is rather partial in favor of the Spanish Church than too severe toward it.

Just so far as the Spanish bishops were noble in sustaining, at the Council of Trent, with the French bishops, the anti-Ultramontane doctrines, in the same degree at the Vatican Council were they contemptible and mean. In what must so much cowardice end? In Carlist Catholicism, which is a real thing as renewed in 1871. The Red Commune of Paris in 1871 was at least led by robbers and murderers, who professed to deny God and hate the Christian church. But the White and Black Commune of the Carlists has this peculiarly odious character: that it is conducted by the representatives of divine right, paid and sustained by the applause and public subscriptions of people who profess Christianity, and cry: "Vive Pius the Ninth!" And yet these Communists of divine right rob, pillage, demand contributions, burn, destroy, even sack churches, take hostages, massacre them without trial, slay old men, women and children because they do not favor their revolution. These bandits who make up the army of Don Carlos are led by priests, who mingle holy water with their petroleum, and who follow an absolution with a pistol-shot, without difficulty, without remorse, with the greatest facility. Such is to-day the choicest flower of the papist party in Spain. The facts are certified to not only by the official circular of Minister Ulloa, but, besides, by a thousand eye-witnesses.

The Roman Catholics who are not Carlists, and who were supporters of Serrano's government, are indeed less cruel. But what does their religion amount to? This very year, at Madrid, while the sacred procession of Corpus Christi was slowly defiling across the Puerta del Sol, a party of some other Catholic officials had a lunch, the more lively organized a ball forthwith, and "uncorked the ministerial champagne." These details, written by a witness, were published in the Republique Francaise for the fifteenth of last June. Another journal, Christianity in the Nineteenth Century, the official sheet of the orthodox Protestants of M. Guizot's line, relates, in its number for the seventeenth of last July, that a Spanish priest publicly burned a gospel in the Spanish language, as if it were a bad book.

Such is the anti-evangelical and anti-Christian Romanism to which the Spanish Church has attained, with its 9 archbishops and 53 bishops, its 65 cathedrals, 100 collegiate churches and 20,462 parishes; its 70,000 ecclesiastics, 14,000 monks, 19,000 nuns and 600 convents for women. And yet these are merely the figures of the last census; but previously these figures were much greater. In 1830 the Spanish clergy was composed of 152,305 individuals; and in 1834, before the suppression of the convents for men, there were 1,940 convents, containing 30,905 monks and 24,700 nuns. While popish monasticism was so prosperous and so multiplied, the schools were in the most wretched condition. Yet even in 1860 they reckoned up only 3,129,000 individuals who knew how to read, and scarcely 1,200,000 who knew how to read and write.

This example of the ruin of a people possessed of a wonderful soil, and endowed with noble qualities, but perverted by the false religion of the papacy, will it open the eyes of the other peoples of the Latin race, and of all peoples of all races? Let us hope so; although there are men, such as the Ultramontanes, who glorify Carlism and Spanish popery, who declare that they have reached the apogee of Christian piety, and who anathematize as outcasts those who dare to make for themselves any other ideal than this. The worst of fanaticisms is certainly the fanaticism of false religion.—E. Michaud, in the Churchman.

The Fall of the Race.

The fall of man is a great fact, which is to be observed in the difficulty he experiences in reaching that which is good, in his facility to evil, in his indisposition to rise heavenward, in his secret enmity to the thought of a holy God, in his secret suspicion of his brother men, in the wild disorder of his inner being. Truly was it said of man: "Behold, I was shapen in wickedness, and in sin hath my mother conceived me." This is the language not of the psalmist only, but of every man who has studied his own nature, for this predisposition to sin is as old as humanity itself; and though the fact is disregarded, it still remains. The old pagans knew it, as they show by the story of Hercules, the representative hero of their fables, who, although he may reach what seems to be the climax of glory as the conqueror of monsters and tyrants, and the friend of the distressed, yet, as he wraps around him the garment offered him by a woman, finds himself subject to the flames. How, then, has man succeeded to this inheritance of sin? God did not make us as we are. He made our first parent a sinless being. He added to his natural instincts the instinct of grace, which, while it did not make him loyal, rendered loyalty easy. God willed to be served by a willing service, and therefore he left man with a free will, and, as Adam wished to try the experiment of evil, he tried it by his will. We know the sequel. He entered on life under new conditions. Sin, which before the fall had required an effort, became easy; and virtue, which before had been natural to him, required an effort; and as he was, so his children became. He left them his nature, with its traces of a noble past, but he could not leave them the robe of righteousness which he had left behind in Eden. He could not but leave them an entail of weakness and corruption—the inheritance of moral death.

This doctrine of the transmitted effects of the fall is often urged against Christianity as a tenet inconsistent with the justice of God. Now, in reply to this, we may say that at any rate we do not escape from the difficulty by rejecting the doctrine, since the same feature of the divine government meets us elsewhere. Take the case of a parent debased by drunkenness or debauchery. He transmits to his children a nature condemned to an unusual share of pain. Here the argument against the doctrine of original sin on account of its inconsistency with divine justice would at once impeach God for allowing such a man to become a parent, instead of cutting him off from the earth. Or look at the moral disadvantages entailed on other children by parents. Their first lessons are lessons in vice and blasphemy, which will insure them a future of certain misery unless some one interferes and takes them away from the influence. Of such children there are thousands, and it may be urged in their case, with just as much force as before, that the justice of God ought to prevent all this. And yet he does nothing of the kind. Or, again, we see a man born with good ability and endowed with powers of usefulness, and yet his life, it may be, is overshadowed by one act of his father, against the effect of which he struggles in vain. Why, it may be asked, should the good God give so much, and yet allow it to be ruined? Louis the Sixteenth, we know, went to the scaffold for the errors of a dynasty of which he was a virtuous member, and even we Englishmen pay taxes for wars carried on by our grandfathers, with which we had as little to do as with the campaigns of Julius Cæsar. In short, if we look to man's physical nature or to his moral nature, or to the structure of nations or families, we see this same dependence of one generation of men on another; and so the argument against original sin is seen to be an impeachment of God's general government of the world. He does, it is true, sometimes break through the rule. The [illegible] of the captivity complained of [illegible] of suffering, and [illegible] was told to assure them that every man should bear his own burden, and that the entail of punishment should end there. But the rule prevails as to the general government of the world, and God deals thus with us in all our lives. Clearly, as the Creator, he has a right to do this. Who shall dispute it? And, let it be remembered, it tells both ways, for it is the principle of man's restoration as well as the principle of his fall. Adam's sin affected all, and so Christ suffered for all. God sees fallen man in our first parent, and he sees restored man in our second; and so St. Paul says that "if sin abounded, grace did much more abound."—Canon Liddon.

The State of the Blessed Dead.

It is as if one bright light were lifted for us in the midst of a realm brooded over by impenetrable mist. For who knows whither the departed spirit has betaken itself when it has left us here? One of the most painful pangs in bereavement by death is the utter and absolute severance, without a spark of intelligence of the departed. One hour, life is blest by their presence; the next it is entirely and forever gone from us, never to be heard of more. One word, one utterance—how precious in that hour of anguish do we feel that it would be! But we are certain it never will be granted us; none has ever come back who had told the story. Where the spirit wakes and finds itself—this none has ever declared to us, nor shall we know until our own time comes. Now, in such a state of uncertainty, these texts speak for us a certain truth: The departed spirit is with Christ. * * * The moment of the departure from the body puts an end forever to this imperfect, struggling, fitful faith and doubt. The spirit that is but a moment—that has left that well-known, familiar tabernacle of the body a sudden wreck of inanimate matter—that spirit is with the Lord. All doubt, all misgiving is at an end; every wave raised by this world's storms, this world's current of interest, this world's rocks and shallows, is suddenly laid, and there is a great calm. Certainty for doubt, the sight of the Lord for the conflict of assurance and misgiving, the face of Christ for the mere faith in Christ—these have succeeded, because the departed spirit is "with the Lord," companying with him. * * * That we need not be utterly disappointed if our picture of heaven be at present ill composed—if it seem to be little else than a gorgeous mist, after all. We cannot tell in the members of the landscape at present; if we could we should be in heaven.—Dean Alford.

PAIN is in some wise the artist of the world which creates us, fashions us, sculptures us with the fine edge of a pitiless chisel. It limits the overflowing life. And that which remains stronger and more exquisite, enriched by its very loss, draws thence the gift of a higher being.—Michelet.

GOD is everywhere—except in Rome; for there he has a vicar.

The Origin of Newspapers.

Who thought of the newspaper first? It seems to have had its birth in that land of vivid gesture and grave gossip—Italy—and the first paper of which we have any record was a monthly, published in Venice by order of the government, in manuscript, as printing had not then been invented. It was called a Gazetta, which word is a derivative of Gazerra, the name of a magpie or chatterer. In the Magliabechian Library, at Florence, are now to be seen thirty volumes of Venetian gazettes, in manuscript, the last of which is dated in the sixteenth century. The Venetian conservatives clung to their script after printing was an accomplished fact.

The epoch of the Spanish Armada, in England, was the epoch of the first English newspaper. In the British Museum are preserved several newspapers which were printed in 1588, while the Spanish fleet lay in the British channel. The earliest of these is entitled the English Mercurie, which by authority "was imprinted at London by her highness' printer, 1588." So to the sagacious forethought of the great Queen Bess, and the wise policy of the great minister Burleigh, the English-speaking peoples of the world are indebted for the model of our present necessity—the newspaper. Deprive us—ye sweet little cherubs who sit up aloft, ye weird sisters three who preside over our fates—deprive us of our boots, our breakfasts, our funds in bank, but take not from us our morning papers. In this early journal is the news of the day, and a well-written article, designed to arouse and stiffen timid loyalty, tells of the discovery of a Spanish plot to murder the Queen. There is a heroic poem, too, called "Elizabethe Triumphans," by one James Asker; a critical article on an unfortunate author, entitled "Father Parson's Coat Well Dusted," and various witty sayings, all printed in Roman letter.

To a physician of Paris (Renandot) belongs the credit of having first collected in fugitive sheets the news of various countries. This first venture was a weekly, issued in healthy seasons, when patients were few and the doctor at leisure. He obtained a license to do this in 1632.

The first daily paper, after the accession of William and Mary, set its sails to catch the wind of popular favor by printing on its title-page The Orange Intelligencer. Yellow, dusty, insignificant in comparison with our splendid news sheets of to-day, we still cannot help regarding with a certain reverence those pioneers of liberty and intelligence—the first newspapers.

METHODISTS AND THE WOLF-BOUNTY.—A Methodist minister is responsible for the following story, which we find in the Richmond Christian Advocate: "Judge Moore, of Kentucky, was present in his Legislature when the member from Big Sandy—an unlettered delegate—made a speech on the relation of nations to religion. The question was whether the premium paid for killing wolves and foxes should be abolished? The member nodded to the chair and said: 'Mr. Speaker, is this House going to take away the consolations of religion from Big Sandy? Sir, no Episcopal parson preaches there, for nobody has read enough to scotch for him. The Presbyterians, the properest preachers in the world, won't come, because we can't always hold in and behave ourselves. The Baptists have tried all the streams about there with a pole, and none of the creeks are deep enough, and they are skittish about taking 'em into Big Saudy, for that ain't a place to tussle in if you can't swim. They were afraid to undertake Big Sandy, so they quit. The Methodists are our only chance. If Kentucky don't keep on paying people for killing wild varmints, the foxes and wolves will catch all the chickens, and then you may say farewell to the circuit-riders.' The House didn't take away the 'consolations of religion' from Big Saudy, but paid for killing the 'varmints.'"

A SHARP REBUKE.—In a certain village in Scotland the minister was one Sabbath day catechising his congregation, and put to a woman, singular for the two rare qualities of zeal and earnestness, the following question: "How many persons are there in the Godhead?" To the amazement of all assembled she answered: "There are two persons in the Godhead—the Father and the Son." Once more the minister put the question, and this time he prompted her. The same answer, however, was given. "See," cried the clergyman, turning arrogantly to his brethren in office, and glancing severely upon the people, "see the lamentable result of high-flown zeal and ignorant assurance. This woman would fain teach others, while she herself is more ignorant than a child. What gross darkness! Don't you know, woman, that there are three persons in the Godhead—the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost?" "Yes, sir," replied the woman; "I know well that the Bible says so; but which am I to believe, the Bible or you? We hear you name the Father, and sometimes, but not so often, you make mention of the Son; but who ever heard you speak about the Holy Ghost, let alone the sinner's need of his grace!" The minister stood rebuked, while the people went home to discuss and think.

IT IS NOT every suffering that makes a man a martyr, but suffering for the word of God after a right manner, to wit: in that holy, humble, meek manner which the word of God requireth.—Bunyan.

SCIENCE has no faith-begetting power. Therefore a Christian faith should not rest upon scholastic wisdom, but on the power of God renewing his heart.—Haubner.

Religious Intelligence.

THE venerable Edward Bickersteth, D. D., has been elected Dean of Lichfield.

TWO MEMBERS of the Presbyterian Church in Australia have just contributed, one $100,000 and the other $150,000 toward the founding of a university in Adelaide.

THE Chinese in Carson City, Nevada, have got a minister of their own. If anybody asks them: "What for?" they reply: "Ah Fer!" That is his name.

EVERY prominent German university, except Heidelberg, is now under predominant evangelical influences, and Heidelberg is nearly empty of theological students.

AN attempt was made January 27, by means of an Orsini bomb, in the Cathedral of Leghorn, to kill the officiating bishop. One seminarist boy was the only person injured.

THE members of the presbytery of Coleraine, Ireland, pledge themselves "to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, as beverages, for the love of God, of their fellow-men and of their own souls."

THE Pope has hired the upper part of the building in Rome in which Mr. Van Meter's schools are held, and established a telegraphic communication with the Vatican. He wants to know what Mr. Van Meter is doing.

THE East African expedition of the Church Missionary Society has arrived at Mombas, and preparations are being made for the opening of a station among the Wanikas, on the mainland. It is expected that many liberated slaves will be settled around Mombas.

THE Presbyterian says correctly: "In giving an account of a church lately one of our exchanges said: 'It has a grand Jardine organ, likewise a mortgage for $15,000.' The proportions are well observed here—a grand organ and a large debt, the organ playing the congregation 'out' very sweetly on a Sabbath morning, and the debt occasionally playing the sheriff 'in' on some dismal week-day."

OUR English exchanges inform us that the week of prayer was greatly blessed throughout Prussia, and especially in Berlin. Thousands came to the meetings who had never previously manifested any interest in religious exercises, and the attendance surpassed all expectation. One of the meetings, at which fifteen hundred persons were present, was attended by the Empress of Germany, and her countenance and approval of the exercises is said to have exerted a most wholesome influence upon public sentiment.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY commenced their labors in Liverpool February 7. There were four services in the specially erected building, the object of which was to invoke a blessing upon the undertaking. At the early service about six thousand persons were present, and at the afternoon and evening services the hall was crowded, while thousands of persons went away, being unable to obtain admission. Upon the platform there were several clergymen of the Church of England and of various other denominations. The great bulk of the audience consisted of the working classes.

THE boards of the Presbyterian Church are calling loudly for immediate aid to meet deficiencies. The Home Mission Board is about $15,000 short. The Board of Education calls for $70,442 to supply appropriations already made. The Missionary Fund of the Publication Board is without a dollar, and $3,000 in debt. The Relief Fund for Disabled Ministers reports a deficiency of about $50,000. The Committee on Freedmen finds itself short $5,000. The Board of Foreign Missions has received since last May $198,000, which is within about $5,000 of the amount received during the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year.

ROMISH PRIESTS IN ENGLAND.—The Roman Catholic Directory for 1875 gives lists showing that the number of the Romish clergy in England has increased during the year from 1,662 to 1,728, and that they have more churches by sixteen, there being now 1,041. In Scotland, too, there has been a slight increase. They have had two peers added to their number—Lord Emly and Lord Ripon; but the former is only a commoner exalted, while they reckon that they have only one more than before, inasmuch as Lord Camoys' name no longer appears in the list. It would be interesting to know who has directed his omission, and, if it is involuntary on the nobleman's part, how Lord Acton comes to be spared.

THE German Parliament has recently passed a new and comprehensive marriage law. Under its provisions the civil contract is compulsory, although it may be followed by any religious ceremony. Men above twenty-four and women above twenty-three may marry without their parents' consent; the marriage of priests and nuns is legalized; and all relatives usually entitled to marry in Christian countries may marry. Divorce is made a civil process entirely. It is reported that since the adoption of civil marriage in Prussia about three-fourths of all the marriages have been unaccompanied with any religious ceremonies. That is not a specially pleasant or promising thing for the future of German homes.

THE Illustrated Missionary News gives some account of the mission work of the village church at Ermelo, in Holland. The little community here is under the pastoral care of Rev. H. W. Witteveen. The activities of the congregation were aroused by a revival some twenty years ago, and have been steadily expanding during this period. The church now possesses seven buildings at Ermelo devoted to works of mercy. It has schools for children, houses for the sick, the aged, for orphans and destitute children. Its home mission work is carried on at a number of places in Holland. The foreign missionaries supported by this congregation labor in Sumatra and South Africa. Mention is also made of missionary work in China, Egypt and among the Jews, although we can find no further notice of these labors. The funds for the support of this extensive enterprise are expected in answer to prayer.

FRENCH ECCLESIASTICAL STATISTICS.—The London Times gives the following interesting figures relating to the position of the Roman Catholic body in France: "In 1861 France reckoned 86 archbishops and bishops; 189 deans and sub-deans (vicaires generaux,) 711 canons and prebendaries, 3,517 vicars (cures,) and 30,191 country vicars and incumbents' (desservants.) By adding curates (vicaires,) bishops in partibus infidelium, chanoines-eveques, chaplains des derniers ordres, and non-Catholic clergy (ex. gr. 948 Protestant pastors,) the number of those members of the secular clergy whose standing is recognized by the State under the Concordat mounted up to 43,557. A further addition of the supernumerary priests, deacons and sub-deacons, paid by vestries in populous parishes, the prison and college chaplains and unattached priests, brings the aggregate number of persons directly or indirectly living by religious professions in 1861 to 79,581 men and 124,893 women. In 1861 16,815 monks, friars and brothers occupied 2,518 houses belonging to 86 different communities; 88,091 nuns and sisters were inmates of 12,239 houses, and belonged to 279 different orders or communities. So that at that date 365 communities, cloistered or free, flourished in France; their 14,397 establishments harbored 101,906 religious persons who exceeded by upward of 60,000 the whole body of secular clergy recognized by the State. The seculars and regulars of both sexes make up a grand total of 309,382 persons. The secretary of the Paris Statistical Society, M. A. LeGoyt, estimates that in the seven years, 1852-58, the brotherhoods received gifts and donations amounting to 927,882 francs (£37,000 in round numbers,) while the sisterhoods were presented with a sum of 9,025,577 francs (£360,000,) of which 5,789,755 francs came by donations, and 3,232,824 francs by bequests. In January, 1857, the real estates owned by those monastic and conventual bodies were valued at 105,370,000 francs (£1,200,000,) yielding an annual income of 3,641,000 francs (£186,000;) the acreage of their landed property, which was 9,185 hectares (22,000 acres) in 1850, had grown into 14,600 hectares (35,000 acres) in 1859, thus nearly doubling itself in ten years. If this rate of increase had been kept on, religious communities must now own some 30,000 hectares (75,000 acres) of land in France, though only 80 years have elapsed since the confiscation of Les biens du clergé. By comparing the number of religious establishments in a French town or city at two dates 25 years apart, the rate of progress may be inferred for the whole country. For this purpose we have selected Boulogne not for any features special to itself, but owing to the accessibility of documents in respect of that town bearing on the points at issue. In 1850 the churches and chapels open for religious worship were only eight in number, St. Nicholas, St. Joseph, St. Louis and La Visitation being open to the public, while the other four being attached to convents, the public had very limited if any access to them. In 1875 mass is celebrated in 22 churches and chapels, several of which are noticeable for their extent (the cathedral,) their architectural merit (St. Alphonse,) or for their origin like St. François-de Sales, which was built at the expense of an English Catholic family by an English architect. In 1850 the town records mention eight communities, of which four had been established long before the great revolution, viz.: the Ursulines in 1624, the Annonciades in 1625, the Augustine Sisters at the Hospital in 1702 and the Brothers of the Christian Doctrine in 1708. Twenty-five years later, instead of one brotherhood, Boulogne owns 5; instead of 7, 15. Twenty communities thus occupy the ground of the 8, with no corresponding increase of population. The Jesuits have brought from Metz the staff (31 masters) and pupils of their college into the former bishop's palace and a large suburban chateau. The Passionists and Redemptorists have come from Belgium and opened home and foreign missions. The Little Sisters of the Poor have rapidly risen from humble beginnings to be the owners of ample houses, broad fields and a conspicuous chapel. All institutions under religious supervision have thriven plenteously. The infant primary and adult schools for girls under nuns, which were only 3 in 1850, now number 21, the 3 charity schools under Christian Brothers now are 8, while the 5 lay schools have been reduced to 4. Societies under clerical guidance work among the poor, the sick, the menages irreguliers, or else entertain working men and their families on Sundays with lectures, recitations, music, billiards, etc., in order to keep them from public houses and other dissipation. Several Catholic libraries under clerical supervision lend and circulate books, selected with a purpose, among the laboring classes. Means ample and ever ready have been forthcoming for any scheme floated by ecclesiastical promoters—charity sermons, offertory gifts, collecting boxes, pilgrimage funds, Peter's pence, private solicitation, and every variety of alms, have replenished the clerical exchequer during the direst trials of France. It would be highly interesting to ascertain the increase of house and land property acquired by gift or purchase within the last twenty-five years; for though documents and State information are withheld, still every resident can ascertain for himself that in Boulogne, at any rate, the numbers, establishments, income and property of conventual and monastic bodies have more than doubled in that short period. Very little doubt, indeed, can be entertained that a parallel movement has been going on throughout France."

The Luxury of Trust.

It is one thing to feel that we ought to trust, and another to delight in it. It is one thing to be satisfied with trusting, and another, after reason is exhausted, to submit to faith simply because there is nothing else that we can do. The ways of God are perplexing only to those who have not arrived at the simple conviction that the infinite Father is absolutely wise and good. How to reconcile his dispensations with love and compassion should occupy but little of our thought. God "giveth not account of any of his matters." He has his purposes, and there is nothing arbitrary in his course; but we may not understand the plan in its details, nor comprehend the methods by which that plan is carried out. The reason of our afflictions in general is revealed, but the grounds of their particular appointment, and the discrimination and seeming partiality in their administration, are beyond our grasp. While we cannot know, the deeply spiritual do not care to know. They are not troubled because they do not understand. They love to trust. They find a perfect satisfaction in leaving the problem with God. Faith is not a hard and disquieting necessity, but a restful and joyous goal.

Perhaps to none, certainly to few of us, is the plan of redemption without its mysteries. God has revealed so much as is needful, and so much as is best; but, after all our philosophies of the plan of salvation, and our speculations, the abyss of the unknown opens wider and wider. The atonement was an expedient springing from love, and the whole work of redemption is ordered by perfect wisdom. Do we now comprehend it all? To the perverse and to the worldly-wise the cross is a stumbling-block and foolishness, but the most devout have occasion to exclaim: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" A religion which involves the incarnation, the vicarious sufferings of Christ, the new birth and the resurrection, is not without mysteries most profound. But would the true believer have it otherwise? This very element of the incomprehensible is the most satisfying and assuring of all. It is in our better nature to lean upon something higher than ourselves, and to find repose in that which lies above our "ken". If the doctrines of the gospel were brought within the limits of our present apprehension they would lack that which makes them most comforting and precious. It is more than duty and necessity, it is a privilege to trust.

Admit that we cannot altogether explain how prayer can avail in the material or the moral sphere of human interests. Does the man of prayer wish for the solution? He knows, what neither science nor philosophy can find out, that prayer is heard and answered. He is in communion with the God of nature and of grace. He walks with him, and is conscious, daily and hourly, of a presence and support of which unbelief knows nothing whatever. His blessings and benefits, and his afflictions also, are connected with his prayers. He is ever praying, and God is always answering. Strange answers some of them may seem to those who know not God, especially when afflictions and calamities come upon the righteous, and the good are stricken and cut off in the midst of their days. But the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. Sickness, poverty, bereavement overtake the trusting, and health, prosperity and sunshine are also thrown into the varied web of life. All are related to prayer, and the heart of love and faith knows that all things work together for good. The future of this world may be dark, daily bread precarious, how we are to get through is beyond our ken, but God will take care. He who demands a test or gauge of prayer cannot pray at all; he never will because he cannot trust.

The believer wishes no demonstration. The zest and blessedness of trust are in implicit reliance upon the promises. Faith is itself the substance and the evidence. The wife loves to lean upon her husband—to depend upon him for support. She would not have it otherwise. The child nestles satisfied and happy in the mother's arms, and is content not to know, and to be safe and tranquil in the affection that guards its life. Those who have reached a true trust in God wish for nothing better. They have passed beyond the mere sense of obligation and the agony of enforced submission. They have attained to a healthier and higher state than that of asking wherefore, and of attempting to explain the divine methods. As children they nestle in the Father's bosom, they feel their safety in the arms of Jesus, they trust the gospel even more completely than they can expound it.

Our great and good Bishop Andrew, when told that he was dying, with the sweetness and simplicity of a child-like spirit replied: "God knows best." The Christian cannot know, nor does he care to know. It is enough that his heavenly Father knows. It is a luxury to trust, a heaven on earth to rest in God. It is just this and nothing more that accounts for the tranquil light which rests upon the hearts of some amidst the severe ordeals of affliction, and explains the peace which others carry with them into the rough passages of life, and into the valley of the shadow of death.

In the Spirit.

John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and he heard the great voice as of a trumpet, and the visions of the Apocalypse were unfolded. He was divinely prepared for those grand and sublime manifestations, his soul was in harmony with the music of heaven, and his whole nature was in frame for the waiting revelations. It is not for us to attain to that peculiar inspiration under which the prophets and apostles wrote and spoke, but in an inferior and somewhat different sense the Christian is sometimes in the Spirit.

The preacher knows well what it is to be in the Spirit on the Lord's day—to be in proper trim for his work in handling the word of God, and in leading the people up to the high places of grace and salvation. Upon this depends whether he shall be weak, even "flat, stale and unprofitable," or vigorous and powerful in dispensing the word, and rejoicing "as a strong man to run a race." He often comes to the pulpit depressed at heart, already wearied with the burden before it is laid upon him, and utterly out of accord with the labor he must perform. The health of body has much to do with soundness of mind. If the physical organs are deranged, and the mental action sluggish, the spiritual buoyancy and cheerfulness suffer. The mind may be filled with cares and anxieties connected with temporal affairs, and these obtrude in spite of all the good man's efforts to banish them long enough to deliver his message. The week has been one of domestic solicitude, of annoying interruptions. The time and the disposition for study have both been wanting. There may be the skeleton of a sermon in the head, but there is not in the heart anything to give it life. A lodge in the wilderness, a cave in Horeb or a brief sojourn in a great fish would be a relief.

The Lord's day has come, and its work is upon him, but he is not in the Spirit. Who does not envy John his quiet in "the isle called Patmos," with the day "so calm, so clear, so bright," and the whole inner being glowing with the presence and raised to rapture with the vision of him who has the keys of hell and of death? To have a heart and mind for our work, in the day and hour it is to be done, is surely a blessing of no ordinary magnitude. It may not be always possible to command this desirable condition, but something may be done to secure it. The soul must be kept in communion with the Holy Spirit and in full sympathy with Christ in the work of redemption. Whether we are preachers or hearers, expounders of the word or engaged in other departments of church service, we shall be more effective when filled with love and peace than when the spiritual life is torpid and sluggish.

The world and its pursuits, the daily vexations and harassments of business, and contact with human selfishness and passion, are apt to interrupt, if they do not destroy, our habitual heavenly-mindedness. There is for us no tranquil refuge in some sea-girt isle, but there is the stronghold of secret prayer and meditation upon the things unseen. To keep up this spiritual force as a chief factor in our usefulness, and as the main element of power, there must be this retirement and seclusion of soul. To be in the Spirit on the Lord's day as preachers and hearers, to be in the Spirit at the prayer meeting, and on all occasions where duties are to be performed or privileges enjoyed, there must be watching unto prayer. Blessings manifold and surpassingly great are lost because we are not in the Spirit. Our Sundays are dull, our very worship a stupidity, and there are to us no manifestations of the Savior, because we are not in a condition to receive them.

Taking Religious Papers.

Talmage devoted one of his Friday night services to religious journalism. Our preachers might follow his example to advantage. Next to the Bible, the religious newspaper lies nearest the roots of our religious prosperity. Our respect for a professor of religion is immensely increased by knowing that he takes a religious paper. Here is an extract from Talmage, as reported in the Christian at Work:

I argue to-night in behalf of the taking of religious newspapers into all the families of the church and of the world. You take a morning paper—perhaps two morning papers. You take an evening paper—perhaps two evening papers. They are secular. Certainly there ought to be a religious newspaper in every Christian household. Without such a paper it is impossible that a family be intelligent in regard to the doings in Christ's kingdom. You would pronounce that business man utterly stupid who did not take a secular paper. You would have no very great respect for a merchant who, applying to no secular journal for information, should be ignorant in regard to the money market, in regard to the tariff of certain styles of goods, in regard to our peaceful or belligerent relations with foreign nations. You would have no regard for a man interested in the affairs of his country who never consulted the papers in the autumn in regard to the respective merits of candidates of different parties seeking office.

BUT HOW UNUTTERABLY STUPID

is that Christian man who sits down with no religious newspaper, ignorant of the grand achievements of Christ's kingdom. During the last war the army was divided into three divisions. You watched their marching, you read the list of the killed and the wounded. You kept yourself well informed in regard to the victory or to the defeat of those armies; yet have you no interest in the fact that there are scores of divisions in Christ's army, all in the field to-day? There is the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions—one division of the army; the London Missionary Society—another division of the army; the English Baptist Missionary Society—another division of the army; the English Wesleyan Missionary Society—another division of the army, and scores of other grand and glorious institutions, battling for Christ and the salvation of the world, going on from conquest to conquest. And are you not aware of their achievements? Are any of you ignorant of the great revivals in Ireland, in Scotland, in England, in France, in Germany, in Italy—all over the world? Do you not know that there is thunder all along the line, and that the people are coming into the kingdom of God by hundreds and by thousands? The church of Christ is assaulting Mohammedanism, assaulting paganism, assaulting all forms of despotic government. How are we to be intimately acquainted with all this grand procedure unless it be through the religious newspaper?

I argue also in behalf of taking religious newspapers into all the families of the church, because we need something to preach to us all the week long. We go into the house of God, and we hear the gospel for an hour Sabbath morning and an hour Subbath evening. But we want something on the stand, something on the library shelf, something by us to preach on Monday, on Tuesday, on Wednesday, on Thursday, on Friday and on Saturday. We want a religious newspaper, that we may take it up five minutes while we are waiting for breakfast, that we may take it up in the half hour of leisure after tea. It may be we only have time to read a sentence about Christ or heaven, or read some call to a heavenly life, or read some fact in regard to Christ's kingdom. A religious newspaper preaches a sermon three hundred and sixty-five days long in every year, but the sermon is different from other long sermons in the fact that you can get away from it when you want to. We need religious information all the week long. The tendency of business is to make us pack-horses, to make us mere carts, to make us mere yardsticks. It is shoes, shoes, shoes! all the week. Hats, hats, hats! crockery, crockery, crockery! ribbons, ribbons, ribbons! Now the religious newspaper comes in and says:

"YOU ARE IMMORTAL.

After awhile you are going to be done with these things, and you are to have an existence which will defy all the ages of time and all the cycles of eternity."

Rev. John Wilkinson.

MR. EDITOR: Of course pneumonia has no respect of persons, but it does seem that even disease might have pitied the world enough for its few good and needed men to have dealt less hardly with John Wilkinson; or, rather, less hardly with the church and the world that needed him, for its hard dealing with the man's lungs and brain was only its rough and determined driving of the chariot that bore him off to his glory and rest.

The Louisiana Conference would have risen en masse and positively forbidden his transfer without her bounds; it was simply impossible that he could be spared under any circumstances. It was plain enough that he could not even die—the secretary, the leader, the able preacher, the accomplished pastor, was so indispensably needed. As far as I can see, Baton Rouge cannot be supplied without leaving some other work among you as bereft and waste. I said in my haste, in a letter of condolence to Bishop Keener: "What does God mean?" Blessed be his name, he knows that I ask that question only out of adoring yet amazed trust. Yet faith would be a misnomer and a nonentity without mystery.

I intended only in this note to you, Mr. Editor, to speak, for speak I felt I must.

John Wilkinson counted one in this world. In [illegible] with him a plenty of ciphers [illegible] to picked up in any community, whose only account in the world were possible by being affixed to make John Wilkinson's worth millions. I shall never forget his Conference sermon a year ago. It was a masterpiece of scriptural truth, of thought, order and diction. I said to the trustees at Centenary College, last summer: "John Wilkinson is the man for your next commencement sermon;" and so they ordered, and so he was, but so he will not be.

I stood by him when he was married to Miss Mollie Keener. I congratulated the bride; I congratulate her now, since it must be so, that she is the widow of such a man.

I said again in my haste to Bishop Keener: "Can anything in this world be less certain than the life of a good man, needed, sorely needed by his family, by the church and by the world, as a very and indispensable blessing?" May not such questions be pardoned us in the great baptism of cloud on which we all, who knew, appreciated and loved John Wilkinson, are now feeling for each other and for the light?

Other hands and calmer moments will prepare the fitting memoir and delineation of his great qualities of mind and heart and life. Your space will not permit a mere outburst longer. W. V. TUDOR.

ST. LOUIS, April 12, 1875.

Daniel Webster on Sunday Schools.

Much has been said, says the Northern Christian Advocate, of the celebrated letter of Daniel Webster on Sunday schools. The following is a correct copy of the original letter:

MARSHFIELD, June 15, 1852.

PROF. PEASE—Dear Sir: I have received your very able and interesting annual report of the condition of the New York Subbath School Association, and read it with great pleasure and instruction. It is gratifying, very gratifying, to learn that, in "a city where vice and immorality run riot with impunity," a few humble Christians have devoted their time and energies to the cause of religion, and I fervently pray that your labor may be crowned with success.

The Subbath school is one of the great institutions of the day. It leads our youth in the path of truth and morality, and makes them good men and useful citizens. As a school of religious instruction it is of inestimable value; as a civil institution it is priceless, and has done more to preserve our liberties than grave statesmen and armed soldiers. Let it, then, be fostered and preserved until the end of time!

I once defended a man charged with the awful crime of murder. At the conclusion of the trial I asked him what could induce him to stain his hands with the blood of a fellowbeing. Turning his blood-shot eyes full upon me, he replied in a voice of despair: "Mr. Webster, in my youth I spent the holy Sabbath in evil amusements, instead of frequenting the house of prayer and praise." Could we go back to the early years of all-hardened criminals, I believe, yes, firmly believe, that their first departure from the path of morality was when they abandoned the Sabbath school, and their subsequent crimes might thus be traced back to the neglect of youthful religious instruction.

Many years ago I spent a Sabbath with Thomas Jefferson at his residence in Virginia. It was in the month of June, and the weather was delightful. While engaged in discussing the beauties of the Bible, the sound of a bell broke upon our ears, when, turning to the Sage of Monticello, I remarked: "How sweetly, how very sweetly, sounds that Sabbath bell!" The distinguished statesman for a moment seemed lost in thought, and then replied: "Yes, my dear Webster, yes, it melts the heart, it calms our passions, and makes us boys again."

Here I observed that man was only an animal formed for religious worship, and that, notwithstanding all the sophistry of Epicurus, Lucretius and Voltaire, the Scriptures stood upon a rock as firm, as unmovable as truth itself; that a man, in his purer, loftier breathings, turned the mental eye toward immortality, and that the poet only echoed the general sentiment of our nature in saying that "the soul, secure in her existence, smiles at the drawn dagger, and defies its point." Mr. Jefferson fully concurred in this opinion, and observed that the tendency of the American mind was in a different direction; and that Sunday schools (he did not use our more correct term, Sabbath) presented the only legitimate means, under the constitution, of avoiding the rock on which the French republic was wrecked. "Burke," said he, "never uttered a more important truth than when he exclaimed that 'a religious education was the cheap defense of nations.'" "Raikes," said Mr. Jefferson, "has done more for our country than the present generation will acknowledge; perhaps, when I am cold, he will obtain his reward; I hope so, earnestly hope so. I am considered by many, Mr. Webster, to have little religion, but now is not the time to correct errors of this sort. I have always said, and always will say, that the studious perusal of the sacred volume will make better citizens, better fathers and better husbands. Of the distinguished Raikes, he was 'clarum et venerabile nomen.'" I took the liberty of saying that I found more pleasure in Hebrew poetry than in the best productions of Greece and Rome; that the "Harp upon the willows by Babylon" had charms for me beyond anything in the numbers of the blind man of Smyrna. I then turned to Jeremiah (there was a fine folio of the Scriptures before me of 1458,) and read aloud some of those sublime passages that used to delight me on my father's knee. But I fear, my dear friend, I shall tire you with my prolix account of what was a pleasant Sabbath, spent in the company of one who has filled a large space in our political and literary annals.

Thanking you for your report, and heartily concurring with you in the truth of your quotation, that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to a people," I remain, with a high regard, your friend,

D. WEBSTER.

Missionary Day in Louisville.

The missionary secretary, Dr. McFerrin, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, speaks as follows of the meetings and collections in Louisville on Sunday, April 11:

Sunday morning was threatening, but the congregations in Louisville and Jeffersonville were good. Missionary sermons were preached in most of the Methodist churches, and collections were lifted amounting to over $2,000. The brethren of the Louisville district will meet the entire demand made upon them this year for the cause of missions, and it will be done cheerfully.

The most interesting item of the day was a mass meeting of the children of the Methodist Sunday School Union at Library Hall, where they were addressed by the secretary and Dr. Young on the subject of missions. The congregation was large, the meeting delightful, and a handsome collection was taken up in aid of the cause of missions, eleven Sunday school boys waiting on the congregation. The secretary is under obligations to the schools, their superintendents and teachers, and especially to Bro. J. L. Wheat, who presided at the meeting, and gave his visiting brethren a cordial welcome.

THAT OBITUARY?—Yes, we have received it and a hundred more. The mortality among our people would seem to be greater this spring than at any time for years past, and just at the juncture when most room is wanted our space has been curtailed by the publisher. We shall have to give up the entire paper occasionally to obituaries, or we shall be compelled to do a fearful amount of work in condensing. Dear friends, let your words be few, your biographies short and your patience long. We wish to put every obituary in, and shall try. When an obituary has been sent do not supplement it with tributes of respect and a long array of resolutions. The obituary notices in Mr. Wesley's early minutes are models. We believe that the obituary of John Fletcher occupied not more than a dozen printed lines.

A MEMOIR of Rev. R. F. Perdue, by Dr. McCarty, will appear in the next number of the ADVOCATE.

Death of Rev. E. V. Levert.

The death of this venerable preacher is announced in the following note from Bro. Foust. Bro. Levert was not at the last session of his Conference—the first time, we believe, that he had failed to answer to his name for many long years. We last saw him at the meeting of the Alabama Conference in Selma, December, 1873, and it was our fortune to be a fellow-guest with him under the hospitable roof of Col. Woolsey. We enjoyed his society much, and more than ever were impressed with the gentleness, goodness and vivacity of the eloquent and aged servant of Christ. His conversation was rich in information and lucident pertaining to early times, his spirit was cheerful, and his mind fresh and active. He was seventy-nine years and six months old at the time of his decease. By his death is broken one of the precious links connecting us with the fathers of Southern Methodism. We hope an extended memoir will be prepared of this excellent and well-known standard-bearer of Methodism in Alabama.

MARION, ALA., April 19, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: With painful regret I announce to you the death of the oldest member of our Conference, Rev. E. V. Levert died this morning at seven o'clock. His illness was short, and his death was rather unexpected. Some disease of the heart is supposed to have been the cause of his death. For fifty-four years he has been an eloquent expounder of the gospel in middle Alabama. He died as he lived, and is now doubtless enjoying the rest for which he so long labored.

Yours in Christ,

J. E. FOUST.

MR. VARLEY'S DEPARTURE.—This celebrated evangelist, says the Christian at Work of April 22, has left New York for Boston, whence, after two weeks of labor, he proposes to sail for Europe. He has done a grand work in this region. He has shown among other things what a right-souled layman may do for God. He has stood before vast assemblages with plain Bible truth, and instructed them, and been the means of eternal salvation to many. If England has any more men of that spirit, let her send them over. Through such influences we will have the earth girdled with revivals. Hammond in San Francisco, Somerville in India, Pearsall Smith in Germany, Moody and Sankey in England, and Henry Varley in New York! Let us by all means have the world saved. Who cares whether or not men work in our way and according to our tastes. We want the harvest gathered in, and we care not how crooked the sickle that cuts down the grain, nor how queer the cart that hauls in the sheaves. We hail as Christian workers good men of all characteristics and modes. May everlasting sunshine be upon the head of Henry Varley. We pray for him a glorious time in Boston, a smooth passage across the sea, a hearty welcome on the other side, and a meeting between him and us in the last great day of fruit-gathering. Hindered by other engagements from saying this at the farewell meeting in Mr. Hepworth's church, we take this mode of pronouncing a benediction.

BISHOP PAINE.—Rev. Dr. Murrah, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, Aberdeen, April 17, says:

Our much-beloved and venerable Bishop Paine is quite ill. He returned home a few days ago from holding a District Conference in New Orleans. From overwork, I presume, he was ill before he left the city, suffered a good deal on the way home, has been in bed most of the time since his return. I am just from a visit to him; he does not suffer quite so severely as two days ago. I hope he may have passed a crisis in the attack. We should all implore the Master to spare him to us. The church needs his valuable services.

We presume the Bishop is better by this time, as we have heard nothing further from him. May his life be long continued to his family and the church.

WE ARE pained to see, by the Western Methodist of April 17, that the editor, Rev. W. C. Johnson, has met with a heavy bereavement in the death of his daughter, Sallie, aged fourteen, who died of pneumonia on Sunday, April 11. May God bless and sustain the sorrowing parents in their affliction.

ON OUR second page will be found the Sunday school address which Bro. Wilkinson prepared, but did not live to deliver. The many little friends and youthful readers of the ADVOCATE will be delighted with it. It is to them and to us all a voice from the sky.

REV. M. C. BRIGGS, D. D., pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at Evanston, Ill., gave us a call this week. Dr. Briggs is on a hurried trip southward for rest and recreation. We wish him a pleasant and healthful time in our midst.

THE fraternal camp meeting at Round Lake is to be repeated this year, July 1-14. This is in accordance with the request of many of the leading persons who attended the meeting of last summer. Already an advance sheet of the Round Lake Journal has been issued, containing much useful information, portions of which we may give hereafter.

Supporting the Ministry.

The Christian Observer, under the head of "An Improved Phraseology," has some very good suggestions which Methodist stewards and people might consider. The Observer says:

A smile has crept into the proceedings of many presbytaries when a clause similar to the following has been read aloud by the temporary clerk from some pastoral call before the body:

"And that you may be free from worldly cares and avocations, we hereby promise and oblige ourselves to pay to you the sum of $300 in regular quarterly payments during the time of your being and continuing the regular pastor of this church. In testimony whereof we have respectively subscribed our names," etc.

As we pointed out last week, there are many country congregations who are unable to raise an adequate pastor's salary in money, for the reason that there is little of it circulating through their pockets. But the congregations who cannot properly provide for their pastor in some way, if they have the will, must be very small in numbers. Ten families, if they give the tithes to God, will support the pastor's family in as good style as they themselves live. Where tithes cannot be paid in money they may and should be paid in produce. Many of the small salaries which cause an involuntary smile in presbytery are supplemented by many presents of food, of clothing, of fuel and of fodder. But no one likes to receive his dues as a gift. And these presents are precarious. The pastor cannot count upon them. They do not, therefore, free him from "worldly cares." The present system or lack of system of supplementing inadequate salaries does not keep the "glare of the wolf's eyes" from looking through the study window. We will suggest, therefore, to those country congregations which are unable to raise a suitable salary in money, that the following mode of filling the blanks in the pastoral call would sound much better:

"And that you may be free from worldly cares and avocations, we hereby promise and oblige ourselves to pay to you the sum of —— hundred dollars in regular quarterly payments in advance, also wheat, corn, fodder, wood, bacon, etc., to the value of —— hundred dollars, each to be delivered at its appropriate season at the parsonage, during the time of your being and continuing the regular pastor of this church."

MEASURING BY THE EYE.—Years ago, when we went to school in the little weather-beaten school-house on the corner, we remember what exciting contests there used to be over the teacher's favorite exercise of having the scholars try to estimate with the eye the size and weight of different objects in the room. He would hold up his cane, for instance, and have each one tell how long he thought it was, and it was a lucky child that could come within half a foot of the right length. He would take a boy's straw hat and ask how much the crown would hold. He would measure the urchin and then try to have the scholars reproduce the measure on the wall. He would mark off an inch or a foot or a yard in some conspicuous place, and then see how near anybody could come to chalking the same length upon the blackboard. And it was astonishing to see how wide astray one could go.

The fact is, our eyes deceive us most ridiculously even about the commonest things. At first thought, which should you say was the taller, a three-year-old child or a flour barrel? And could anything but actual measurement convince you that the same child is half as high as a six-footer? There is an old saying that a child at two years old is half as tall as he ever will be, and after a few experiments in measuring one can easily believe it, but not before.—Advance.

THE REVIVAL IN MACON.—The gracious work goes on. In all the Methodist churches extra services are held with blessed results. At Mulberry Street the noon and night services are largely attended, the congregations are profoundly attentive and serious, penitents profess to find pardon, and their places are at once filled by other earnest seekers. We write at the close of the fourth week of the meeting, up to which time there have been eighty-three applications for membership. At Jones chapel the close of the fifth week of extra meetings has been reached. The services have been marked by the greatest interest, a large number have professed faith in Christ, and there have been forty applications for membership. At First Street services have been held for the past week with very encouraging prospects. There have been several applications for membership, and the indications point to a gracious outpouring of the Spirit on that congregation at an early day.

Our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren are also holding extra services, with gracious results.—Southern Christian Advocate.

WE ARE GLAD to learn through a note from President Price that Huntsville Female College is enjoying an excellent patronage. A large faculty is maintained, and over one hundred and fifty pupils have been enrolled this year. Huntsville, north Alabama, is beautiful for situation, and Bro. Price, besides being among the foremost in the pulpit, is not excelled as an educator.

A SACRED CONCERT will be given at the Lafayette Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. Markham, pastor, on Thursday evening, April 29. We are obliged to Dr. Markham for complimentary tickets.

CHRISTIANITY sanctifies even our physical life.

PAY POSTAGE.—Subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid at the old rates—viz.: two dollars per year—and whose subscriptions run into 1875, are required under the new postage law, which goes into effect January 1, to pay postage at the office of mailing. The subscription price hereafter includes the postage. Two cents per month each month that the subscription has to run, will be sufficient to pay for the ADVOCATE.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

CANAL STREET, CITY PARK AND LAKE RAILROAD.—We are glad to be informed that the above-named important and necessary road is being pushed forward with as much vigor as the nature of the times will permit. They seem to be progressing cautiously, and we believe the affairs of the company are in good and judicious hands. The railroad is bound, in our opinion, to be in the course of time one of the paying roads in the city. See their advertisement.

PHŒNIX RESTAURANT, AT LAKE PONTCHARTRAIN.—The above well-arranged restaurant has the advantages of a fine view of the lake, the fresh sea breezes, fresh fish and oysters, combined with the best that the New Orleans market can afford. Those who wish to escape from the noise and dust of the city for a few hours will find many comforts in the establishment of Monsieur Miguel, the proprietor of the Phœnix.

COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Metallic, Mahogany, Black Walnut and Rosewood COFFINS always on hand. Black Satin.

LAPLACE'S PECTORAL BALM.—Dr. Laplace has for many years enjoyed a very high reputation as a chemist and pharmaceutist, and this tends to inspire confidence in anything compounded by him. We see that he has established depots in St. Louis and Mobile, and we take pleasure in saying to those concerned that we have known Dr. Laplace favorably for about twenty years.

NOUVEAUTES.—For elegant spring goods we can unhesitatingly advise our lady friends to go to Brasselman & Adams', 586 and 588 Magazine street. Read over their list of new goods in the advertisement on this page. Our friends outside of the city will bear in mind that their orders will be filled as well as if they were here to select in person.

FOR boots and shoes, cheap, go to the Blue Store, corner of Orleans and Claiborne streets. Country orders are solicited and promptly filled. See advertisement on this page.

ASTRINGENT CORDIAL.—We call attention to the advertisement of Dr. Brodie's Astringent Cordial, by I. L. Lyons, corner of Camp and Gravier streets.

PIRRUNG'S PATENT SCRUBBING MACHINE, advertised in another column, with electrotype cut representing the machine, is bound, in our opinion, to be largely introduced by housekeepers. We have seen nothing in the line of inventions for household use in a long time that has appeared to us to be more practical or a greater success in labor saving. Address W. H. Shepard, general agent, 106 Camp street. See his advertisement.

ICE DEPOT.—Mr. J. R. Warner, importer of Maine ice, has his depot at 31 Front street, near Gravier, at which place orders for packing and shipping ice to country customers and retail dealers will be faithfully and promptly attended to. Ships, steamboats, and hotels in country towns can be supplied. Those interested will do well to read Mr. Warner's advertisement in another column.

SEE THE CARD of Levy Bros. They have a tempting bill of articles. You will not be likely to come out of their store without buying if you once go in. They only ask of those who wish to buy to see the quality of their goods and understand their prices. Do not fail to call at 580 Magazine street.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of B. T. Walshe, 110 Canal street. The captain has a magnificent stock of furnishing goods, and we cannot do better than advise our friends whose wardrobes need replenishing to give him a call.

DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, being careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelet-holes in last strip, draw them TIGHTLY, causing the steel strips to close on the papers as they rise, and fasten firmly by "belaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and index in front.

HOW CHARLIE MINDED.

Little Charles was playing marbles
With his comrades in the street,
When a window was thrown open,
And there came a voice so sweet:

"Charlie, dear, your father wants you;"
Charlie stopped to hear no more;
Left his playmates and his marbles,
Entered at the cottage door.

Now a merchant who was passing
Wanted soon in his employ
Such a lad as could be trusted,
And his thought of Charlie boy.

And that splendid store was Charlie's,
After years had passed away,
Just because he minded quickly
On that pleasant summer day.

Children should respect their parents,
And obey them in the Lord;
'Tis the first command with promise
Written in the holy word.

Watchman and Reflector.

From Our Young Friends.

SALEM, ALA., April 15, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1. If you can take it and contribute it to the aid of some suffering one it will be a great pleasure to me. Until I can get some more, believe me to be your true friend,

HATTIE B. PHELPS.

(The dollar inclosed will be given to some needy and deserving person. Many thanks for the privilege of dispensing this gift to the poor.—EDITOR.)

SCOTTSVILLE, April 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: You have received several letters from little friends; perhaps never from one in sorrow. Death has invaded our family circle. Four months ago:

"The first that died was sister Minnie;
In bed she suffering lay
Till God released her from her pain,
And then she flew away."

Last Friday morning, at fifteen minutes to five o'clock, our little twin brother, Jimmie, passed away. He has left his twin sister, Bessie, to journey alone over life's rough sea. Minnie was nearly two years old, and Jimmie eight months. They lie side by side in the family cemetery at Gosport.

"There they will rest till judgment day,
Never more on earth to stay."

Mamma has composed a few lines on their death, which I think pretty.

We have a Sabbath school here. Dr. T. B. Rivers is our superintendent, sometimes assisted by Mr. Creagh. They are both zealous Christians. Sister Helen attends Sabbath school regularly. She has a sweet voice, and loves to sing. Brother Tommie goes sometimes. My teacher is Miss Lucy Portis, who is never absent, unless on a visit to the sick. She is a good Christian, and loves the Sabbath school. Mamma teaches school. She has thirteen pupils—six girls and seven boys. I am thirteen years of age. My father fell while defending his country at Richmond. I have a stepfather, one brother (Tommie) and three sisters (Helen, Lucy and Bessie.) I have a stepsister, who resides in Selma with her aunt, Mrs. Baird, who is a great Methodist. How delighted I would be to hear from you, Mr. Editor. I love to read your paper. Many good wishes from

Your little friend,

ANNA LEILA HALCOMB.

SMITH'S STATION, ALA., April 9, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I, too, am one of your young readers. I love the ADVOCATE for many reasons; one is because my dear mother was always so eager to get it and peruse its contents. However, she was not allowed this blessed privilege long. One day the angels came and called her to enjoy higher blessings. Another is because you always encourage the children by recognizing their little letters, and you have so many good stories in it for the children, from which I learn many valuable lessons.

We have a very flourishing Sabbath school up here at a church called Mount Zion. I know you have heard of it, for it certainly is a very great place, with some of us at least. I have been a member for several years; can scarcely remember when I joined. We have a devoted superintendent, who never tires of his charge, and who always welcomes us with words of encouragement; also a faithful pastor, who is ready and willing to give us good advice. He will be greatly missed when he leaves us. We have in our school a missionary and a "try" society, which have proven to be very entertaining as well as beneficial. I have been a member of the latter six years, and have not failed to read my Bible daily in that time. Mount Zion Sabbath school has a very great influence. There is scarcely a child in the community that is not a member. Some that once were scholars have grown up to manhood, and have been called to go out and work in the Lord's vineyard, some of them heading the list of our Conference. I hope that we may be very successful in our Sabbath school this year. We have an anniversary each year for the benefit of the school. I must close for fear I'll get my letter too long.

Dear Mr. Editor, good-by. From your young friend,

CARRIE WADE.

How Mary Got the Scar.

MR. EDITOR: I will introduce myself to you and my little reader friends by saying I was ten years old last January. I live in Prairie Pleasant, seven miles from Opelousas. I started to tell about the scar. About four or five years ago, when I was four or five years old, one morning I was passing around the house. I looked up the tall ladder standing by the wall. I said to the little negroes standing by that I would not go to the top of that ladder for anything. But I did step on the first round. The little negroes asked me how high I could go. I said about two or three rounds, which I did. They then called me a coward. I thought I would show them that I could go higher; so I took another step. They praised me for this, but said I could not go any higher; so I took another step, and so on until I was about ten or twelve rounds high. I looked down and saw I was so high that I became alarmed and hastened to get down. But my foot missed the round and I fell through. Holding on with one hand, I cried for help; but my dear mamma only got near enough to see me fall upon the hard brick pavement, bruising my body and cutting a gash on my brow. But it is all well now—only a small scar.

Papa says the moral of it is this: That one step taken in sin, it is easy to take another, and so on until our characters and souls are scarred. And to illustrate he would call going to the dancing party the first step, dancing the second step, waltzing the third step, and so on, until often character and soul are scarred. It is an awful thing to go before God with a soul scarred with sin. Mamma said: "Maude, what were you thinking about when you were going up that ladder?" I said: "I was thinking if you saw me you would scold me down." "And what did you think when you were hanging by one hand?" "I thought if my dear mamma could only get to me she would save me from that hard fall." Mamma says that I must remember that God sees me when I do wrong, and when I get in trouble I must pray to God for help.

Thank you, Mr. Editor, for the Child's Corner. I may meet you there again if Tom and his frogs don't crowd us out.

Your little friend,

MARY E. BLACKSHEAR.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

Purify the Blood.

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration in health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

☞ Ask your druggist for either of the above medicines, and if he does not have it he will send and get it for you; or can be sent by Express to any part of the United States by addressing

Among the sales on Saturday we noticed middling at 15⅝@15¾c., and strict middling at 15¾c. The business embraced 1,750 bales. On Monday the movement was interrupted by a heavy rain-storm which prevailed throughout business hours, and also by a suspension of telegrams from New York during the morning, the wires being down between Washington and that city. Hence the sales were confined to 900 bales, taken in small lots by eleven buyers. In some cases, in order to effect sales, factors made concessions, but nothing transpired, considering the trifling business, to warrant any change in quotations. On Tuesday, under a decline in futures at New York, and nothing favorable in the other dispatches, the market opened inanimate and drooping, but, as one buyer took 1,200 bales, the sales during the morning were of fair extent, after which the movement exhibited increased activity, and the day's sales summed up 4,150 bales, but the 2.10 P. M. dispatch from New York reporting a decline of ⅛c. in spots, the advantage was still more in favor of buyers, and at the close quotations were further reduced a partial ⅛c. in some grades and a full ⅛c. in others.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,700 bales, against 12,600 for the corresponding time last week and 7,450 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 952,350 bales, against 1,133,672 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 226,125 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 241,450—3,319,431 against 3,560,881. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 26,689 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 39,567 to France and 169,456 to other foreign ports. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

☞ We retain no dead advertisements.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1875. NO. 19.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ATLANTA, April 29.—In Milton county a white boy, aged seventeen, whose throat a negro cut over a game of cards, died instantly. The negro escaped.

OSHKOSH, April 29.—Women and children are lying about the streets, or roaming in search of shelter. Over two hundred dwellings burned.

GALVESTON, April 30.—The sixth Texas State Fair will be held on the State Fair grounds, in Houston, commencing Tuesday, May 11, and to close on Saturday, the fifteenth. A very large exhibition is secured. Lieut. Gov. Coleman, of Missouri, will deliver an address on agriculture. A large delegation from Georgia, Ohio, Missouri and Kansas will visit the fair in Texas.

PHILADELPHIA, May 1.—The Philadelphia Inquirer says editorially: "Hon. William D. Kelley having returned to Washington from a prolonged tour through the South, declares that the vote he most regrets during his fourteen years' service in Congress is that which he cast last winter in favor of the force bill; and he added that so far as his observation went during his extended tour there was no more necessity for the use of a Federal military force South than there is in Pennsylvania or Ohio. He talked with all classes and conditions of men regarding the political feelings of the South, and was surprised to find the prevalence of amity and good will to be universal. Judge Kelley has lost all faith in the stories of Ku-Klux and Southern outrages, having personally proved them to be the myths of mere partisan malevolence. When a Republican of such eminence as Judge Kelley gives testimony such as this, it would seem as if it were time indeed for Mr. Williams to retire to his native wilds of Oregon, and for the superserviceable organs of the carpet-baggers to learn new tunes to stir up vindictive feelings against the South. It would also appear to be time to withdraw our army from these places where it is not wanted, and to send it to the Texas frontier, where it is wanted very much. As a new crop of outrages will be required next fall, it will be just as well for the North to remember the testimony of Judge Kelley."

OMAHA, May 3.—On account of the backwardness of the season the recent frosts have done but little damage. The prospect for wheat, oats and fruit is believed to be the finest ever known in this vicinity. Orchard and forest tree planting has been very extensive this season. It is thought the late frosts have destroyed the embryo grasshoppers.

BAYOU SARA, May 3.—A fire, the work of an incendiary, took place this morning at about one o'clock, the flames consuming the drug store of F. M. Mumford and the unoccupied store of Messrs. Pleard & Well.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., May 4.—The city election was unusually quiet and a large vote was polled. The Democrats make a clean sweep, electing the mayor, clerk and twelve aldermen. This is the first time the Democrats have carried the city since the reconstruction. There is great rejoicing, firing of cannon, etc. Majority, semi-official, 440.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, April 30.—The committee of the Prussian Diet have prepared a bill declaring Old Catholics entitled to a share of Roman Catholic churches, cemeteries and revenues in proportion to their number.

LONDON, May 1, 2 A. M.—A terrible explosion occurred yesterday afternoon in the Bunkers Hill colliery, North Staffordshire, while the miners were at work. At midnight twelve bodies had been taken out. Twenty-three men are yet in the mine. There is no hope that any of them will be recovered alive.

BERLIN, May 1.—Dr. Folks' bill provides that all religious orders shall be excluded from Prussia. Existing establishments are forbidden to receive new members, and their present organization must be dissolved within six months after the passage of the bill. A partial exception is made in favor of religious bodies engaged in education, which may prolong their existence four years, and of those whose object is the care of the sick, which may continue their organization, but are liable to dissolution at any moment. Associations thus continued are to be subject to the supervision of government officials. The property of convents is not to be confiscated, but it will be temporarily administered by the State.

The Emperor has given assent to the introduction of a bill abolishing religious orders in Prussia.

MOBILE DISTRICT.—Report on the State of the Church.—The Mobile district consists of seventeen appointments, six of which appear on the minutes as missions. The preachers employed in the district number eighteen, including the presiding elder. The number of local preachers amounts to sixteen, and the membership to more than two thousand five hundred.

The inquiry in respect to the spiritual state of the church was conducted by the presiding Bishop in a way to bring out all the facts which pertain to this interesting and vital subject. The reports were made by the preachers in charge, who are competent witnesses. These reports are very encouraging.

We have regular preaching on all the charges, and the sacraments are duly administered. The services which are peculiar to Methodism are attended to on nearly all the charges, and we cherish the hope that before many months elapse they will be observed on all.

Our church occupies, and has always occupied, a place in the front rank as an evangelical church of the Lord Jesus Christ. It believes that religion is a reality and a power in the soul. It teaches that regenerating grace is essential to salvation; that this must be experienced by every member who has in him the hope of justification at the judgment, and of glorification in heaven. It insists on the witness of adoption, and the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost given unto us. It holds the doctrine of holiness attainable in this life, and urges all to seek this great blessing by the exercise of true faith in Christ and the regular use of the means of grace.

We have good reason to believe that all these things are earnestly preached to the people; and we are assured that our members are disposed to hear and appreciate such preaching.

We are much encouraged by what we have heard at this District Conference. We cherish the hope that our whole district will be blessed with times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

SILVER CREEK, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We are so rejoiced at the success of Bro. W. H. Nelson, pastor of the Silver Creek circuit, Jackson district, Mississippi Conference, in his labors on that work, that we are constrained to tell the lovers of Zion, who read your (our) excellent paper, what he and his good people have done. Fourteen months ago he went there as an appointee of the presiding elder, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, and when he went to the work he found no building or church organization, but at very great sacrifice he has been able to organize a church and build a house of worship. On last Saturday, April 25, I dedicated it to the service of the Lord. It is a real little gem of beauty, and reflects favorably upon the taste and liberality of the people of that work. May this be the beginning of great things on that work.

HOMER DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed my first round of quarterly meetings, and commenced on the second last Saturday and Sunday. Aside from bad weather, we had a very pleasant and profitable time. The preachers on the district have taken hold of the work with a will to do the whole work of itinerant preachers. The General Rules are being read, expounded and enforced, not in wrath, but in love. We are praying and hoping for a successful year. How my heart was pained yesterday on reading the account of the death of our beloved Bro. Wilkinson. His noble character and excellent talents are no moderate loss to the whole church. His place cannot be well filled in our Conference.

Yours in Christ,

Bismarck and the German Bishops.

Americans who censure Bismarck for his harsh treatment of the Ultramontane bishops of Germany evidently fail to penetrate his motives or their designs. Not only do these recalcitrant bishops foment civil dissensions, and inculcate and encourage disobedience to the laws, but there can be little doubt that, inspired by the Vatican, they are conspirators against the recently compacted unity of the German empire. Their sympathies were always with Catholic Austria, in whose interest they used all their influence to prevent the formation of the union. They were at all times the indefatigable enemies of the project of a united fatherland; and when Prussia, as the inevitable result of the union, became the influential and controlling head of Germany—forcing Austria to shrink within narrower bounds, and to hold a subordinate position—they took no pains to conceal their disappointment or to hide their hostility to the new order of things. The disintegration of united Germany is their real ultimate aim. In the interests of the Roman Church—to which they sacrifice their patriotism, and for which they would reduce their native land to the dimensions of a petty principality—they are aiming to destroy the union which raised Germany, as if by miracle, to the front rank of the mightiest powers of the world. Split up again into petty and conflicting sovereignties, and brought into collision with France and Austria if possible, Germany, they fancy, might become an easy prey to the intrigues of Rome, which would seek to array the Catholic States of Europe in a federative alliance against those which are Protestant, and thus prepare the way for some future Napoleon to crush them in detail. The battle of ideas which Bismarck is now waging against Rome is one on the success of which depends, not merely the peace of Germany, but of all Europe. Germany united is a guarantee of peace. Germany torn into fragments would be a signal of war, widespread and devastating.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE Romanists of Prussia are raising the cry of separation of Church and State, and making a great ado about the liberty of the church. But this wonderful conversion to liberty seems to be quite well understood by the minister of public worship, who thus alluded to it and us in a recent speech before the Parliament: "I am also in favor of separation of Church and State; but I fear that we do not all mean the same thing by these words. A representative has just pointed to America, where the State does not interfere with the church, but we believe that his longing look over the sea is just now being cast back on the Old World. It is very natural that the powerful institution of the church has not there the history which it has with us; there it is relatively in a beginning whose development is not yet understood. But even these beginnings are causing fears in the breast of many an American who is anxious about the future of his country. We know in Prussia the powerful opposition of the church, and believe it to originate in its desire to be let alone that it may do what it pleases, untrammeled by the State that supports it. With our experience we feel bound to oppose this 'liberty of the church' with all our might." This cry of the Ultramontanes is for the liberty of the priests to rule the masses to their own purposes.—New York Christian Advocate.

ONE of the finest chapters in current history is quietly recorded in the report of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal upon the famine of 1874. We find it condensed in the Spectator. The English government recognized the impending danger, brought every resource to bear, and completely averted it. The most efficient instrument was a railway rapidly built to connect the threatened district with a richer country. Little money was wasted (there is no hint that any was stolen,) for the Spectator estimates that three-fourths of the expense was most necessary, and the remaining fourth was amply repaid by the experience gained. But the most noteworthy feature is the net result of lives saved. The Lieutenant Governor, upon a careful estimate, concludes that two millions of people would have perished but for the government's intervention—that is, there were saved from the most distressing of deaths a number of people three or four times as great as the whole number that perished in our own civil war. And it is noted that, instead of being pauperized by the relief, the people were found to have become more industrious. It may be presumed that India at least will rate this achievement higher than any victory of Clive or Wellesley.—Christian Union.

Colored M. E. Church in America.

Bishop J. A. Beebe, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, has just held a District Conference in Millersburg, Ky. We interviewed him for the benefit of the readers of the Central. He is, we should think, a full-blooded negro, about forty or forty-five years of age. Of medium height and compactly built, he has a high forehead and pleasant countenance. His manners are good, neither servile nor pompous and offensive. We found him well informed, while his language was much more grammatical than we hear from a majority of the whites with whom we come into contact. He was born in Fayetteville, N. C., and was elected Bishop in March, 1873. He reports his church in a general state of prosperity.

The Southern Methodists offered their church to the colored friends on Sunday, and the whites who attended were so well pleased that by special request Bishop Beebe preached on Monday night, in the same house, to a large congregation of white persons. All pronounced the sermon orthodox in doctrine, systematic in construction, happy in illustration, devotional in spirit, and generally correct in its grammar. We learned that the Bishop did not owe his freedom to the war, but prior to that had purchased it by the payment of $2,000. This sum he made in three years, being a first-class boot and shoemaker; and so great was his reputation for probity that, being sold at the death of his mistress, a citizen of his place advanced him the money to effect the purchase. We doubt if his church pays him anything like an equivalent in salary for what he could make at his trade.—Central Methodist.

PATRIOTISM OF ROMANISM.—The Methodist, ably discussing the school question, well says:

"Not many, we suppose, will be misled by the specious plea that the Catholics pay taxes, and are therefore entitled to a share of the proceeds of the taxes for the education of their children. As well might this claim be set up by every Protestant denominational school. We all pay school taxes, not for the education of our children, but of the children of the State, by the State, that they may become good citizens. The Catholics betray their want of patriotism by their habit of confining their attention to their own aggrandizement. In all their movements they show an utter selfishness. They are forever prating of their determination to secure their share of the tax money, and apply it to the support of their own schools. We Protestants cheerfully accept our part of the common burden, and pay for our denominational schools besides. We want the State to have intelligent citizens, and are ready to contribute to the necessary cost. Looked at in this light, the attitude of the Catholics toward the State is exceedingly discreditable to them. There is no indication whatever given by them of an interest in the commonwealth; they act toward it as though they were aliens."

AT THE opening of the Mexican Congress, on April 12, the President, in his speech, referred among other things to the spirit of bigotry and prejudice which still lingers among some of the people, and leads to disturbances of the public tranquillity. He also stated that measures would be submitted for the consideration of Congress making education compulsory and providing for a normal college for female teachers.

Tributes of Respect to Rev. John Wilkinson.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT BY OPELOUSAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Whereas, An all-wise Creator has, in the exercise of his inscrutable providence, removed from the sphere of his work and taken unto himself our well-beloved brother and fellow-laborer, Rev. John Wilkinson, the sad intelligence of whose death has just reached us; And whereas, We desire to give some expression of our appreciation of the lovely character of the deceased, of our deep sorrow, and of the sympathy the members of this body feel for the bereaved family of our deceased brother; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the early death of the Rev. John Wilkinson we witness one of those divine providences which, from a human standpoint, men are not able to reconcile with the wisdom and goodness of God. Though sorely afflicted, we as Christians do humbly submit, knowing that though "his ways are past finding out," yet will it be made manifest to us when we leave this vale of flesh.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family of our deceased brother, with the members of his charge at Baton Rouge, and with all the household of faith who knew him to love him; and we deplore the loss which our church and the cause of religion generally have sustained in the early death of this devoted minister of Christ.

Resolved, That these resolutions be communicated by the secretary to the family of our deceased brother, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, to the Opelousas Journal and to the Shreveport Times for publication.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT FROM BATON ROUGE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

On Thursday, the eighth instant, the students of the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute held a meeting to determine upon some appropriate expression of their sorrow at the death of Rev. John Wilkinson, whom they had learned to love as a man and to honor as a minister of the gospel.

After discussion a committee were appointed, who have reported the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove from among us his servant and our friend, the Rev. John Wilkinson; And whereas, His earnest devotion to the cause of education in general, and his intimate and tender relations with the officers and students of this school in particular, demand from us some expression of our sense of the deep loss we have sustained; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the students of the Baton Rouge Collegiate Institute, while recognizing in this dispensation the hand of a Providence "too wise to err and too good to be unkind," lament, in common with all who knew him and who sympathized with him in those noble labors to which his life was given, the death of our dear friend and benefactor just when his powers had reached maturity, and when his career seemed opening on yet wider fields of usefulness.

But since there remains to us still "the legacy of his example, the memory of his deeds," the never silent sermon of a life well spent, be it also

Resolved, That we will endeavor to cherish always a grateful appreciation of this gracious influence as a gift from the Giver of all good.

Resolved, That to the family bereft of so devoted a husband, so tender and solicitous a father, so kind and loving a brother, we tender our heartfelt sympathy in this their great affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the immediate relatives of our lamented friend, and also the Baton Rouge Daily Advocate and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for speedy publication.

Glorious Revival in Albany, Ore.

MR. EDITOR: Have had a gracious baptism of the Spirit at Albany. Have been laboring there four or five weeks. Perhaps one hundred and forty have professed religion, and many, very many are under deep religious concern. The meeting was held in the Northern Methodist church. All the ministers and denominations of the city participated, and great was the "unity of the spirit" and "peace." Our people were especially blessed, and my own soul wonderfully. About thirty have already united with us, and quite a number more have their faces Zionward and are pressing thither.

Have raised a subscription of $1,800 (and am not near done,) and have a good and eligible lot donated, to build a church. Will have it done by July 15, we think.

Greetings to the brethren. Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

Romish Tactics.

The visit of Mr. Chiniquy to Montreal and the results of his preaching in that city are not without lessons of instruction for Christians who desire to study the signs of the times. The large number of French Roman Catholics (two hundred and fifty) who have been led by Mr. Chiniquy's sermons and addresses to renounce Romanism is a proof that many are weary of the unscriptural superstitions of popery, and hungering for the knowledge of the truth. Conversions would be much more frequent, only that the priests use all their influence to prevent the people hearing Protestant teaching or reading the Holy Scriptures; while the representations of Protestants and their faith, which are held up by the priests to their congregations, are gross caricatures, which cannot fail to excite hostile prejudice wherever they are received as true. But Mr. Chiniquy's success in Montreal renders it morally certain that there are thousands of French Canadians, who, if they had only the opportunity of contrasting the religion of the New Testament with the unwarranted novelties of popery, would no longer wear the chains of priestly slavery. Intelligence has recently been received from Spain that during the last six years, while liberty of conscience has been maintained in that country, not less than thirty thousand persons have withdrawn from the Church of Rome and become Protestants. We believe that the tight rein of priestly authority cannot be always held at its present tension in Lower Canada. A great religious revolution will one day break the yoke from off the necks of a long-enduring people, and enable them to taste the sweetness and power of mental freedom.

The conduct of the priests and their adherents in respect to Chiniquy and his work has evinced the true spirit of popish intolerance, and at the same time revealed a significant want of confidence in the power of the teaching of Rome to endure the light of free discussion. But, most significant of all, that the Montreal Witness, merely for publishing Chiniquy's discourses, and protesting against the spirit of persecution in which he has been opposed, has had the honor of being publicly denounced from the Romish pulpits, and those who read it warned that they shall be denied the sacraments. The denial of the sacraments by those who believe them to be necessary to salvation is equivalent to excluding from the privileges of the church, and from the means of salvation. What charity and liberality! The Romish Bishop of Montreal and his priests tell us by this act that if they had the power they would exclude from salvation and heaven any one who reads the Montreal Witness! Paul believed in Christians proving all things, that they might hold fast that which was good. But Rome evidently believes that her only hope of maintaining her influence over her votaries is to prevent them thinking for themselves. What will those Roman Catholics who maintain that their church allows full freedom of thought to her members say to this? Is it liberty to inflict the heaviest penalties of the church on those who read a newspaper that dares to speak against its unscriptural inventions! Such intolerant bitterness will do no good to those who exercise it. The world has outgrown the terror of papal interdicts and priestly threats. Even in Lower Canada these weapons will recoil and wound those who use them, rather than those against whom they are used.—Christian Guardian, Toronto.

The parts which we have recently received of this magnificent work make in all forty-two, the forty-second part closing with "Wilford." We have on several occasions given full and commendatory notices of this new enterprise. It is now nearly brought to completion, and we can assure our readers that the merits of the earlier parts belong to those last issued. There is no falling off in the excellence of the engravings, and the articles show the same careful preparation and general fairness of tone which has characterized the numbers heretofore received. When done it will be one of the handsomest and most valuable works of its kind published.

SILENCE IN HEAVEN.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

"There was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour."

Intensest calm of silence fell
Once, for one little half hour space,
Where blended songs forever swell
In gladness through the holy place.
Then ceased from every golden lyre
The finger-touch that woke its chord,
And every voice in all the choir
Was hushed in presence of the Lord.

What heart in all that listening peace
Grew overfull for silent praise,
And dared be first to bid it cease?
Some soul led home through thorny ways?
Or some who out of fire and flood
Had reached a shelter safe and sweet?
What one of all who, bought with blood,
Were kneeling at the dear Lord's feet?

It may have been a little one,
Whose spirit could not understand
The wonder of the silence thrown
In mystic awe on voice and hand,
Who sudden broke it with a cry
Of love's amaze and love's delight,
And woke the chorus of the sky
Anew to sorrow's matchless might.

Oh, for such pause when we shall bow,
Dear Christ, before thy blessed face!
A silent moment, sweet and low,
To praise, unworded, all thy grace,
To feel the beating of thy heart,
That once our woe was nigh to crush,
And worship thee with tender art
Amid the hallelujah's hush.

Christian at Work.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: In accordance with a resolution passed by you at our late Conference, I have been in correspondence with Rev. A. H. Redford, our publishing agent at Nashville, on the subject of publishing our History of the Mississippi Conference, and take this method of giving you the result. I have corresponded with no other publishing house, because our patronage is due to our own house, where, I think, it can be done well, and as cheap as elsewhere; and then it gives us an active agent and the prestige of our denominational Publishing House to assist in the sale of the work. If published at all, we must pay for it, and I can think of no better plan to raise the money than that recommended in the resolution offered by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt and S. L. Gulce at our late Conference, which was so cordially adopted. The resolution recommends all the members of Conference, both ministerial and lay, to raise, at an early day, from $10 to $25, or any other amount that they can secure, with the understanding that those who pay are to be reimbursed in the books at retail prices as soon as the publication is made. Dr. Redford regrets that the present condition of the Publishing House compels him to publish only for cash in advance, but he encourages the belief that he will do all he can to advance the sale of the work, and expresses the opinion that it will have a very extensive circulation. I have had the first two volumes all ready for publication for some time. For the sake of ending the second volume at a suitable date, it will be a little larger than the first, which makes the difference in the expenses of publication.

Dr. Redford's estimate of the cost of publication is as follows, viz: He will publish one thousand copies of each volume for $2,200. This includes the stereotype plates, which for the first volume will cost $600, and for the second $725, making the greater part of the cost. This will make each copy cost us $1.10, and if we sell at $2 per copy it will allow a considerable margin for transportation, the per cent. of retail agents, etc. The volumes will be about the size of Dr. Redford's History of Methodism in Kentucky, which sells from $2 to $4 per volume, according to binding. The second edition of one thousand copies each will cost us, for the first volume, $420, or forty-two cents per volume; and for the second $465, or, to include the fractions of a cent, forty-six cents and five mills. And this will probably be about the cost of any future editions, should any be needed. Thus we see, should the work have the circulation that we reasonably hope it will, in addition to the great good to the church which we trust will be the result of its publication, all who advance money for its publication will be reimbursed, and something left for the writer, who so far has received nothing for his time and work.

If the members of Conference, both ministerial and lay, will exert themselves systematically a short time, I have no doubt the money can be raised. We have about one hundred pastoral charges in our Conference, and it would seem to me that the requisite sum can be collected. I have no authority for saying so, but I would recommend that as fast as funds are raised they be remitted to Dr. Redford by postoffice order, to be placed to our credit until the required sum is raised. As our history will embrace the Alabama, Louisiana, North Mississippi and Texas Conferences up to the time they were set off from ours, it is likely that many in those Conferences would assist us in its publication if the matter could be brought before them.

I am now at work on a third volume, and, if life and health are spared, by the time we get out the first two volumes we expect to have it ready. After this—the Lord willing—we may continue to collect materials, but only to be published at the discretion of the Conference.

Yours affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

Obituaries.

REV. ROBERT F. PERDUE was born in Baldwin county, Ga., January 1, 1809; moved to Lowndes county, Ala., when a youth. His literary advantages were meager, having had only such tuition as was then given by what was called an "old-field school." He was converted to God on Saturday night before the third Sunday in August, 1838, and the next day united with the Methodist Protestant Church. According to the good custom of those days, he was tried and found faithful and useful, first, as a class-leader, and then as an exhorter until 1840, when he was licensed to preach. In 1849 he was received into the traveling connection of the Methodist Protestant Church, and was a faithful laborer in that church until 1869, when he was received into the Montgomery Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was appointed as a supernumerary preacher on what was then called Autauga circuit. Here he filled five regular appointments, and his labors were greatly blessed. In 1871 he was appointed to Elmore circuit. Here he made full proof of his ministry, insomuch that about one hundred were added to the church. In 1872 he filled St. Stephen's and Washington mission; in 1873-74-75 he was again on Elmore circuit. In 1874 some of his members wandered off into whisky-drinking, and many more into the no less sensual and demoralizing dance. Mildly, kindly, but firmly and in the fear of God, he proceeded to the administration of discipline. About twenty who loved whisky and dancing more than God and the church were expelled. At the next Quarterly Conference, as the result of faithful exercise of discipline and preaching, he reported ninety-three additions to the church. The good accomplished is but faintly indicated in these numbers added to the church. The moral status was raised, so that those who remained and those added to the church were assured that these evils would not be tolerated.

He returned from the Conference held at Opelika, last December, with a severe cold; but in a few days recovered partially, so as to enter upon his work with his accustomed zeal and energy. He preached at Pleasant Grove on the third Sunday of February, and reached home on Monday evening, the twenty-second, complaining of being unwell, but kept up till Thursday, the twenty-eighth, when he was confined to his bed with pneumonia. His sufferings were very great until the morning of March 10, when he died in great peace. He expressed entire willingness, even desire, to depart and be with Jesus. He declared, as did Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." He was satisfied he would die from the first, and after attending to some necessary business he dismissed all worldly thoughts from his mind. Nothing seemed to trouble him except that the congregations on his circuit were being disappointed. Thus, with nothing but the church and heaven in his thoughts, he went to sleep in Jesus.

WILLIAM A. MCCARTY.

DEATH OF A MOTHER IN ISRAEL.

MRS. MARTHA LEWIS was born, of Baptist parentage, in Robeson county, N. C., October 10, 1801. The name of her parents was Spier. At the age of fifteen she was united in marriage to Mr. Quinea Lewis, and about 1820 they emigrated to Mississippi, and settled in Marion county, east of Pearl river. Mrs. Lewis had been religiously brought up, and to this date, in the estimation of those who judge according to the outward appearance, had led a life of comparative innocence. But she knew that she was not yet "a new creature in Christ Jesus," and that within she was full of sin and unbelief. A conviction of this fact had given her many days of painful anxiety and bitter regret. "They that seek shall find" is the infallible promise of the Savior. On the third Sabbath in May, 1822, with a burdened and penitent heart, she had gone, with her husband, eight miles to church and back, but no blessing came to her wounded and sorrowing spirit. Family matters being adjusted, she retired alone to pour out her soul in prayer for the sensible forgiveness of her sins. While thus engaged she saw the Savior by faith, and trusted in him with all her heart. Suddenly, powerfully and unmistakably the long-sought blessing came. Her burden of sin and guilt was gone, and her soul was filled with love and peace and rapturous joy. She always retained an assured evidence of her acceptance in Christ, and to the hour of her death this seemed to be the brightest spot in her whole past life. Who, in all the country where she has since lived, has not heard her, both in public and private, dwell with rapture on the hour in which she first believed with the heart unto righteousness? She and her husband joined the church in love-feast, at Union Academy, June 15, 1822, under the ministry of Thomas Griffin, and two more faithful and consistent Christians this writer has not known.

As Bro. Lewis still survives, in his eighty-first year, I do not propose to write his memoir, and shall only refer to him incidentally. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis soon became greatly attached to the doctrines and usages of Methodism, and began to take an active part in all the social meetings of the church. Family prayer was immediately established, and in the absence of Mr. Lewis she would lead the family devotions. In company with other elect ladies, she soon began to lead in prayer in the class and prayer meetings of the church, and such was the fluency and fervor of her prayers, and the simplicity and power of her faith, that through her long pilgrimage she was often called on to lead in prayer for penitents at the altar, and many souls were converted at such times. She was a model Christian at home, always diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. I believe the family never did or would keep a negro on the place. They preferred to avoid any trouble or responsibility in connection with the ownership of the race. Both parents and children did their part in providing amply for the wants of the family. Mrs. Lewis' house and table were patterns of neatness. There was a gracefulness and regularity in everything, which indicated a well-digested method. In keeping the Sabbath she was a model for all Christian wives and mothers. Every Saturday was with her a day of preparation for the Sabbath. The wood for the kitchen was cut and conveniently laid at hand; the vegetables were gathered; sundry articles of food that could be relished cold were cooked and laid by for Sunday; the coffee was ground and the churning attended to, so that the Sabbath might be a day of rest and religious devotion to the whole family. She usually attended public worship in the forenoon, but the Sabbath afternoon she generally spent quietly reading her Bible, in private meditation and prayer, and conversing with her household on religious subjects. We had a right to expect good fruit as the result of such a life of holiness; and we have it. Hers is a pious family. She gave to the Mississippi Conference two of our most reliable and useful ministers in her sons, Henry P. and William B. Lewis, and rejoiced in being the honored mother of two such preachers. May they ever follow her as she followed Christ. After several years' residence east of Pearl river they moved across to the western part of the same county, and by their Christian zeal and industry contributed largely in building up the celebrated Water Hole church and camp ground. Subsequently they removed to the waters of Magee's creek, in Pike county, and greatly assisted in establishing and building up Pine Grove church. Of late years they have resided near Holmesville. Mrs. Lewis had generally been remarkably vigorous until within a year or two, when she began to decline perceptibly; but her descent to the tomb was as beautiful as had been her holy and happy life. About ten days before her death her son, Rev. H. P. Lewis, asked her if she knew she was sinking very fast. She replied: "Yes, but it does not alarm me." She revived, a few days before her death, for a few hours, and seemed to think it possible she might get up again, but soon became more prostrated than ever. A few hours before her death her son asked her if her way was bright and clear. Putting her arm around his neck, she replied: "Yes, all bright and clear." The family were then called in to witness her departure, when she again, in reply to a question, said: "There is not a single doubt across my mind;" and in a few moments quietly went to sleep in Jesus. She died on Sabbath morning, January 31, 1875, in the seventy-fourth year of her age, and the fifty-third of her profession of saving faith in Christ.

MRS. ELIZA PACE, consort of Rev. L. A. Pace, and daughter of Hawood and Catherine Frazer, was born March 8, 1838; was converted and joined the M. E. Church South, at Mount Zion, Crawford circuit, Alabama Conference, in 1856; was married December 6, 1860, and died March 24, 1875.

Sister Pace had the gracious privilege and advantage of being brought "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Thus favored and trained from childhood, she was, from the time of her conversion to the end of her pilgrimage, a stable and consistent Christian.

She married in view of the trials and responsibilities of the itinerancy; and during the connection of Bro. Pace with the traveling ministry she was a helpmate indeed for him. She assisted him in the Sabbath school, in the social meetings of the church, and in visiting the sick, the poor and distressed. Wherever their lot was cast the people loved her.

Four years ago the hectic flush first made its appearance, and was to her husband sadly prophetic of the end. The better to care for and nurse her, whom he loved as his own soul, two years ago Bro. Pace located. But all that love and care could do availed not. She continued to decline. Her sufferings were great. She was confined three years to the house, eighteen months to her room, and five months to her bed.

At times she was not as well assured of her acceptance with God as she desired to be. It was not fear, but a want of assurance. It was hard, too, to part with her husband and children. Such was her condition when, during the session of our Conference in Opelika, I last saw her. At that time I conversed with her fully and freely, and parted with her at the close of Conference, said that I should see her on earth no more, but confident she would die in peace. About a month before she passed away she manifested some fear of the agony of death, and that her Savior might not be with her. Bro. Pace said to her: "Often, in going to our fields of labor, I have gone on in advance, and made arrangement for you, and have written back to you to come on, that everything was ready. Were you afraid to come?" She replied: "No, no; you had written to me, and I knew you would be there to receive me." He then read to her the fourteenth of John. She cried, clasping her hands: "I see! I believe! I believe!" She doubted no more. She had them sing for her, a few nights before she died, "Sweet Hour of Prayer," and "Nearer, my God, to Thee." She died in peace.

She has four children—three on earth and one in heaven. She and the one are on the other shore—her husband and the three tarry awhile on this.

JOHN BRETT DUNNINGTON was born February 7, 1795, near Neaugemi Creek, Charles county, Md. Bro. Dunnington was a soldier under Gen. Stewart, and took part in the defense of Washington city in the last war with Great Britain. He came to New Orleans in 1818, where he remained for the two following years, when he came out to this (the Tangipahoa) country, where he ever after remained. In 1821 he was married to Miss Alcy Lauier, and settled on the Tangipahoa; in 1821 or 1822 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church under the ministry of the late William Winans, D. D., and when the division of the church took place he adhered to the Church South, and remained in its fold till the time of his death, which took place in Tangipahoa parish, La., September 13, 1874.

For seven years he was assessor of Livingston parish, and for a number of years was justice of the peace. His house was a home for the preachers; and as a professing Christian he reared, and as long as he was able kept up, a family altar. As a professor of religion he was a faithful attendant on the means of grace. His last public act was to take the sacrament of the Lord's Supper with his brethren and children. He said: "It is the last time." So it proved; but his end was peace. His many friends will mourn his loss; but his race is run, though a long one. Those who knew him best believe he has entered into his rest. Yea, we believe it, for his last days were so mellow, so humble, so forgiving, so childlike—just what we should expect a Christian to be.

MRS. SARAH SHOAFE was born in Baden, on the Rhine, in Germany, September 9, 1816, and departed this life March 30, 1875, in Whistler, Ala. She was brought to Mobile in the year 1832, and there and near there she spent the remainder of the days of her probation. Her maiden name was Summers. She was first married to Mr. Glasscho, who lived a short time; after his death she married Mr. Stepper, with whom she lived till his death. Then in 1852 she married Henderson Shoafe, who still survives her.

She was raised under the influence of the Lutheran Church by her parents; and if she was not a Christian from the time she knew good from evil, she was at least strictly moral in all things. In this way she lived till 1844, when, in Sumterville, Sumter county, Ala., she professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Church.

Her religion was not formal and lifeless, but consisted of an inward vitality—a crucifixion to the world, and a resurrection with Christ, whose image she bore. And like her Master, she went about doing good. It was characteristic of her to visit the sick and needy, giving such relief as she was able. Often she walked miles on such errands of mercy. In her last days she was brought to meager circumstances; but the promise of God was fulfilled in that she wanted for nothing necessary.

Finally the chastisement of the Lord was upon her. Within a few days of four long weary months she lay upon her bed, struck with paralysis. From the beginning to the end of her suffering she could not utter a word. In silent resignation she passed from among us, leaving the evidence of a consistent godly life to point to her heavenly inheritance.

W. M. WINN, Pastor.

MRS. CHARLOTTE TURNER, daughter of Adam and Levisa Biagamun, was born in West Feliciana parish, La., on the thirteenth of June, 1809, and was united in marriage to Thos. Turner on the third of May, 1827. In a short time afterward they removed to Point Coupee parish, where her husband died in 1844. The care and responsibility of rearing and educating her children—four in number—then devolved upon her alone. To avail herself of the advantages of Centenary College, in 1852 she moved with her family to Jackson, East Feliciana parish, where she remained until 1869. She then came to Franklin parish with her son-in-law, C. H. Ratliff, and a widowed daughter, and she remained here until her death, on the eighteenth of February, 1875.

Her illness (pneumonia) was of but few days' duration, but her bodily sufferings were great, though she did not murmur nor complain, but with Christian resignation and fortitude she endured as seeing him who is invisible. She was a consistent and exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and had been so for upward of forty years. From some cause unknown to the writer she never united with the church at this place. She was a kind and tender mother and grandmother, a true friend, and obliging to all. Death had no terrors for her, and while passing through the dark valley she was undismayed, and looked steadily beyond the stream to her home in glory.

Enter thy Master's joy."

A. W. MOORE.

JAMES PHILIP COOK, son of P. B. Cook, of Yazoo City, Miss., was born in the above-named place; and having always lived, from his infancy to the age of twenty-two years, five months and nine days, in his native town and county, he passed away, after a short though painful illness, March 12, 1875. He was the eldest of a large family of brothers and sisters. He had been trained, in his father's drug store, to the profession of a druggist, and had just returned from the medical school in Louisville, Ky., where he attended, during the past winter, his first course of lectures. He was a young man of good moral character. He was attentive to business, kind to his brothers and sisters, and affectionately obedient to his parents. He remained at home, subject to his father's rules, though a man. He had many years ago joined the church; and while he was not as outspoken as we could have wished him, yet his character was good; and though he might not have been satisfied with his own experience, he tried in his dying hour to put his trust in the goodness of God as manifest in the Lord Jesus Christ. Just before he died, though suffering intensely, he arose, with assistance, and kissed each of the family and bid them farewell. Oh, such a scene! The first-born, the son of promise, the stay of his father and mother, taking his final leave! He is gone; and by his death we are admonished to prepare. May the comforting grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be near the afflicted loved ones. May they, with all who profess Christ's name, be more faithful, even "unto death."

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

DIED, at his home in Madison county, Miss., March 9, 1875, PETER L. DAVIS, son of the Rev. A. Y. Davis and Rebecca B. Davis. He was born February 8, 1853, having just entered on his twenty-third year. For the last two years he had resided at Batesville, Miss.; and in August, 1874, during a protracted meeting held in that town, he joined the church, and immediately wrote home to tell his father the good news that God had, for Christ's sake, pardoned all his sins, wondering that he had so long sinned and so long grieved the Spirit. Peter was a dutiful, obedient, good boy from his childhood. He came home about two weeks before he died, intending to remain with his parents; but, feeling unwell, a physician was consulted, who declared it to be typhoid fever, and gradually he grew worse, and in a few days died. His mind being flighty from the commencement, it prevented any conversation with him about his soul's salvation. In the midst of life we are in death. Bro. A. Y. Davis is worn out in this Master's service, and is one among those early Methodist preachers who had large circuits. In labors abundant and little remuneration, but having the satisfaction to know that he was serving his generation according to the will of God, we pray that Bro. Davis in this sad bereavement may have grace to bear him up and to exclaim: "Thy will, not mine, be done."

R. BRADLEY, P. C.

ANN ELIZA NOBLE, wife of Fleming Noble, departed this life suddenly, of apoplexy, at her residence in Richland parish, La., March 20, 1875.

The subject of this notice was born in the State of Mississippi on the twenty-fifth day of October, 1875. Sister Noble was married three times, and now leaves behind her a fond husband and six children. Three of the children are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and through her prayers and faithful life as a Christian mother it is hoped that the remainder of the family will soon be gathered into the household of God. Sister Noble joined the Methodist Church in early childhood, and has lived a holy Christian life for about fifty years. She was truly a mother in Israel, and her loss to the church as well as to her friends is great. Some years ago she suffered a slight attack of paralysis; and, forewarned of the probable way that she would be most likely to die, from that day she more strictly kept her house in order with true Christian watchfulness; and, though cut off so suddenly, her pious life fills us with the hope that she is now shouting praises to the Lamb around the throne of God.

AUGUST GOTTSCHALL.

A. C. RAMSEY, JR., was born in Wilcox county, Ala., December 11, 1850, and died at the place of his birth, February 20, 1875.

This noble young man was well born and well raised. He was the youngest son of Rev. A. C. Ramsey, now of Gadsden, Ala. Blessed with good home influences and some mental culture, coupled with the advantages of good society and much natural goodness of heart, he became noble in his nature, refined in his sensibilities, and generous in all his impulses. He was an earnest Methodist, a consistent member of the church, and identified with the order of Good Templars. The writer regrets that his acquaintance with him was so short and limited, in consequence of which he is unable to do to his memory the justice his high character merits as a man, a Christian and a philanthropist. He had many friends, and the truth as gathered from them authorizes me to say that he was admired and loved by all who knew him, and that his death is a source of sorrow not only to relations, but to a very large number of friends outside of the domestic circle.

G. F. ELLIS.

THE subject of this sketch, Bro. GEORGE W. MOORE, was born in Marengo county, Ala., May 30, 1831. In 1847 he came to Mississippi and settled in Scott county, where he resided until his death, which occurred January 20, 1875. When but sixteen years of age he was converted and joined the M. E. Church South, and up to the time of his death remained a consistent member. As a professor he was unostentatious, filled with Christian liberality and brotherly love to all. For eight days he was subject to that peculiar suffering produced by pneumonia, yet he murmured not. When told that his days were numbered, and that he must die, he replied: "I have no fear of death." In 1852 he was married to Miss Sarah A. Sims, who, with one child, still survives him.

J. D. HAYS.

DR. P. M. PHILLIPS was born November 23, 1833, in Union district, S. C., and died in Carroll parish, La., August 27, 1874. He was married January 18, 1859, to M. A. Love, in Calhoun county, Ala., by the Rev. Silas Woodruff. He embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Union, in Calhoun county, Ala., in the year 1858, and from this time till translated to the church triumphant he was an exemplary member. He was very much beloved by all classes whom he served as physician. Many will rise up in a coming day and call him blessed for his labors of love. He labored to heal the body and comfort the soul. He has left several brothers and sisters, four children and friends by scores to mourn his loss.

JUST AS IT USED TO BE.

Full many a face the blackboard shows
Of [illegible] and monstrous size,
With mouth stretched grinning from ear to ear,
And lanky neck and ribs so queer;
While underneath, in boyish scrawl,
The master's nickname's on the wall,
Just as it used to be.

Each boy is droning at his desk,
Scratched up with face and form grotesque,
And many a name indented deep,
Posterity's rewards to reap,
Just as ours used to be.

Among the mischief-loving girls,
One has a wealth of golden curls,
And sunny dimples, and her eye
Is blue as an Italian sky,
Just as hers used to be.

Now all on frolic are intent
So long as master's eye is bent;
When he looks up then they look down,
And at their tasks profoundly frown;
When he looks down, with grimace sly,
They twist their faces quite awry,
Just as we used to do.

The master, though severe, was kind—
Affected sternness was combined
With unaffected love of fun;
And when he joked or made a pun
(And cunningly they saw a joke Within his face before he spoke,)
Right loud they roared with urchin craft,
And saw or not the point, they laughed,
Just as we used to do.

'Twas sad to see what used to be,
And find all things unchanged—but me!
'Twas sadder still to think that they
In after years with grief would say:
"O that the days were here again
When all was pleasure, nothing pain,
Just as they used to be."

Our Children and the Sacraments.

BY REV. TRYON EDWARDS, D. D.

TO REV. DR. JOHN HALL—Dear Sir: I read with much interest your article in the Observer of December 17, on the "Sacraments and Christian Life." In it you justly and tenderly urge that our little ones should be brought up to the sacrament of baptism, and as they grow up be told of the love of Jesus, and be taught from their earliest years to love and serve him.

But, my dear sir, why not go a step further, and say that as they are taught to love the Savior, so they should be brought, just so soon as they can understand and feel its meaning, to the other sacrament—to the Lord's table, there with their parents to commemorate the love of that Savior who has died for them.

Is there not something, if not erroneous, yet evidently unsettled and defective in our view or practice, in this respect, as to the relation that our baptized children sustain to the church? Some would say that they are made members of the church by baptism; and others that they are so in virtue of their birth from Christian parents, and that baptism is but the public recognition of this fact. But though all hold that, in some sense, they are members of the church, the question seems still unsettled in what sense and to what extent they are members. And, for the most part, they are left to grow up in the ways of the world; in the thought or with the expectation that by and by, in riper years, they are to be converted, and then in due time "join the church," and be admitted to full communion in its membership. And too often, it is to be feared, the children themselves become habituated to this idea, and grow up with no other thought than that they are not expected to live as Christians until by some sudden conversion they are brought into a new life, and then into full communion with the church.

Now let me ask, as a question to be seriously pondered: "Is not this view a mistaken one?" Where is the scriptural authority for some persons being full members of the church, while others are but half-way members? And if our baptized children are, in some sense, church members, either by birth or baptism, where is the authority or reason for keeping them back from being full members? As they are brought to the ordinance of baptism, why should they not be brought to the Lord's Supper, as soon as they can understand its meaning, just as readily as we would bring them to the hearing of the word preached, or to the meeting of the church for prayer? And if they were so brought, with proper instruction and earnest prayer, just as we would bring them under the influence of all the other means of grace, might we not expect that, from their earliest years, they would grow up as Christians, expecting and endeavoring to live for the Savior, instead of living for years for the world, in the indefinite hope of by and by becoming church members, which is too often thought of as synonymous with being Christians?

Is not this in full keeping with the spirit and teaching of our Confession of Faith, that when our baptized children "come to years of discretion, if they be free from scandal, appear sober and steady, and to have sufficient knowledge to discern the Lord's body," they should be informed "that it is their duty and their privilege to come to the Lord's Supper?" And is it not the practical error of parents, and elders and ministers, that they put off for too long these "years of discretion?" What is there more solemn in the Lord's Supper than in baptism; or, in commemorating the death of Christ at his table, than in hearing a solemn sermon on the subject? And why should not the little ones whom Christ invited to himself, in token of his love, come to his table, which so manifests and impresses that love? And if any one who, we believe, is prepared for heaven, has a right to full church membership, are there not multitudes of these little ones, whom we do not think of bringing to his table, who ought to be welcomed there; and who, if not held back, and thus treated as if they were not, and were not expected to live as Christians, would from their earliest years grow up in Christ Jesus?

Are not these views justified and confirmed by the experience of many, both parents and pastors, who have acted in accordance with them? One of the most distinguished and faithful pastors of New England once told the writer that he had received scores of young children into his church, sometimes against the judgment of its other officers; but that they had been found, if anything, more faithful and consistent than those who had united with it at later years. And Spurgeon tells us that of hundreds of little ones whom he had received into his church, he has never known one so living as to become a subject of discipline. President Edwards gives the case of the conversion of a little girl only four years old, who, down to old age, adorned her profession. A Western pastor tells of two little girls, aged six and eight years, who of their own accord asked to be and were received into the church, and who grew up as almost model Christians, and all of whose children, in after years, grew up to walk in the footsteps of their mothers. Seventy years ago a grandmother took charge of her little granddaughter, about three years of age, for a season. Telling her the story of Daniel, the child became deeply interested, and said she would try to be like him. Of her own accord she went by herself to pray three times a day, as Daniel did; and from that early age began and continued to live a Christian life. A Christian student took charge of a little girl two years old, while her mother went to the communion service. To interest her he told her the story of Jesus and his sufferings, as simply as possible. She became deeply interested, and from that early age grew up a disciple of the Savior; and her mother felt, in after years, that the work of saving grace was begun in her heart that Sabbath afternoon. A father speaks of two of his children as very many parents truthfully can of theirs whose Christian life began so early that they could not remember the time when they did not love the Savior.

These are but a few gleanings from a wide and continually widening field. And they show that little children may now come to Christ as of old, when he himself called them and said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." And if we were more faithful, not only to teach them, and to pray with them and for them, and to teach them to pray, but to bring them, from their early days, to all the ordinances of God's house, should we not find, as is said to be true of the Moravians, that nearly all of our children would grow up as Christians from their earliest years?—New York Observer.

Discipline of the Jesuits.

The method elaborated by Loyola and his immediate companions, for securing the organization of a rigidly disciplined and yet admirably pliant body of ecclesiastical warriors, is a theme on which many writers have dilated. It is indeed impossible to consider the series of "regulations" and "constitutions," of minute injunctions and astute exemptions, which make up the code of the society, without becoming greatly impressed with the forethought and sagacity which could devise provisions so intricate and so nicely dovetailed. The law-makers of the society have framed a set of ordinances and of privileges with a skill that is perfectly marvelous. On the one hand, they supply every conceivable guarantee for crushing out any germ of independent impulse that could by possibility allow momentary play in an individual member to some movement of dissent, however suppressed and strictly mental, from any order emanating from his superior. On the other hand, they are studiedly adapted to instill into those intrusted with the supreme direction of the society a sense of discretion so vast, so ample, and so completely freed from all ordinary limitations, that they may become absolutely imbued with the consciousness of duty being wholly centered in the keen observance of whatever at any particular moment might recommend itself as specially expedient for making particular minds acquiesce more readily in their ascendency. To this end faculties are lodged with the supreme authority of the order, which have no parallel in their range; while the whole plan of the extraordinarily protracted training, to which every member is subjected, has been carefully thought out with a view to the particular end of making him a thoroughly supple instrument, ready at an instant to the hand of his superior for any purpose. That powers of so vast a range might possibly be diverted by some superior to other purposes, under dictates of personal ambition, was a danger which did not escape Loyola. No part of his organization is more noteworthy than the chain of checks and counterchecks for keeping each organ of the system, including the highest; to the precise mark of its intended functions, so as to let it neither lag behind nor yet exceed the measure thereof. A mechanism has thus been contrived which, while exceptionally complicated, has yet worked with noiseless smoothness, setting in action a body of forces elaborately disciplined for the attainment of distinctly specified results, under the guidance of motive powers at once steeled into inflexible rigidity as regards ultimate aims, and yet capable of Protean suppleness in the adoption of forms of procedure at the dictate of policy. It will be found that, while the general professedly figures as a mere lieutenant holding a commission from the Pope, he was yet invested with certain faculties in virtue whereof, in particular contingencies, he might consider himself the depository of powers that rendered the order exempt from the authority of an innovating Pope. The same spirit of jealous precaution is manifested in the provisions for securing the maintenance of the principles of the society against a general who might perchance be infected with ideas not conformable to its spirit. Though invested with absolute power in everything relating to the administration of the society, the general is yet under perpetual supervision, and by the rules he would forfeit his powers in certain specified contingencies. It is this chain of self-acting provisions which makes the "constitutions" so wonderful. The system combines in most subtle proportions the elements of despotism, of monarchy, of oligarchy and of democracy. The fully-professed father—who is so closely bound to obedience that he must perforce bow without murmur to any command, no matter what, which he may receive from the general—is yet quite justified in reckoning on attainment, in due course, to a position that will give him influence in the administration of the order, provided only his capacities are adapted to the character of its labors. The general, again, who is enabled to issue at discretion instructions that must be acquiesced in implicitly by every individual member, finds himself yet perforce surrounded by persons imposed upon him by the society, of whose presence it is not in his power to divest himself, and who are forever by his side like shadows—incessant spectres of admonition—that never forsake him for even the shortest interval. Finally, the Pope, who at first sight would appear to be exalted on the pinnacle of the absolute commander of the faithful—lord over a host of myrmidons sworn to unmurmuring obedience to his whispered word—will be discovered, in the case of certain critical emergencies, to be hampered by limitations not very ostensible but very singular, which, whenever they should come into play, must invest the general of the Jesuits toward him with the character rather of a great feudal magnate, strong in chartered rights, than of a mere captain in command of a body guard in the pay of an absolute prince.—London Quarterly Review.

The Bible.

Who composed the following description of the Bible we may never know. It was found in Westminster Abbey, nameless and dateless, but nevertheless it is invaluable for its wise and wholesome counsel to the race of Adam:

A nation would be truly happy if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed book.

It contains everything needful to be known or done.

It gives instruction to a senate, authority and directions to a magistrate.

It cautions a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury, and furnishes the judge with his sentence.

It sets the husband as the lord of his household, and wife as mistress of the table—tells him how to rule, and her how to manage.

It entails honor to parents, and enjoins obedience on children.

It prescribes and limits the sway of the sovereign, the rule of the ruler, and the authority of the master; commands the subjects to honor and the servant to obey, and promises the blessings and the protection of the Almighty to all that walk by this rule.

It gives directions for weddings and burials.

It promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both.

It points out a faithful and eternal Guardian to the departing husband and father; tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and whom his widow is to trust; and promises a father to the former, and a husband to the latter.

It teaches a man to set his house in order, and how to make his will; it appoints a dowry for his wife, and entails the right of the first-born, and shows how the young branches shall be left.

It defends the rights of all, and reveals vengeance to every defaulter, over-reacher and trespasser.

It is the first book, the best book.

It contains the choicest matter, gives the best instruction, affords the greatest degree of pleasure and satisfaction that we have ever enjoyed.

It contains the best laws and most profound mysteries that were ever penned; and it brings the very best comforts to the inquiring and disconsolate.

It is a brief recital of all that is to come.

It settles all matters in debate, resolves all doubts, and eases the mind and conscience of all their scruples.

It reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to him, and sets aside all other gods, and describes the vanity of them and all that trust in such; in short, it is a book of laws, to show right and wrong, of wisdom that condemns a folly and makes the foolish wise, a book of truth that detects all lies and confronts all errors, and it is a book of life that shows the way from everlasting death.

It contains the most ancient antiquities and strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, unparalleled wars.

It describes the celestial, terrestrial and infernal worlds, and the origin of the angelic myriads, the human tribes and the devilish legions.

It will instruct the accomplished mechanic and most profound critic.

It teaches the best rhetorician, and exercises every power of the most skillful arithmetician, puzzles the wisest anatomist and exercises the wisest critic.

THE Danbury News man says: "An English physician recently removed a section of a patient's liver, placed it on a plate, scraped it carefully, and returned it to its normal action. This promises to work a revolution in the treatment of disease, and in a few years we will have an addition to domestic literature something like this: 'Husband, I wish you would take John's right lung down to the doctor's this morning, and have the middle valve fixed,' or, 'Will you stop into the doctor's when you come home this noon, and see if he has Mary's liver mended, as she wants to go out to tea this evening.' The practice will become so common in time, we are sure, that none of the neighbors will be in any way startled to see a wife with a vail tied round her head leaning out of a bed-room window and shouting to a receding husband: 'Je-re-miah! tell Dr. Scraper to send up Willie's right kidney at once, whether it is done or not. He's had it there more'n a week, and the child might as well be without any kidney, and done with it.'"

How Long to Sleep.

How much sleep is necessary to renew the exhausted energies of the brain and fit it perfectly for its work must be determined by individual experience; but as to children it is safe to say they ought to be indulged to the extent of their inclination. They require more sleep than adults, and old people, if their slumbers are sound, incline to sleep at shorter intervals than persons in the prime of life. The difference in individuals in this respect is very great. Dr. Cooch mentions a man who sleeps only fifteen minutes a day and enjoys good health.

Blaine, in his "Medical Logic," speaks of some missionaries in Cuba who reduced their sleep to the minimum, that they might pursue their labors with the least possible interruption. When forced to rest they threw themselves on a couch with a brass ball in hand over a brass basin. The moment they lost their consciousness the ball dropped from their fingers, and, ringing on the basin, waked them; and this sleep they found afforded all the recruit that nature demanded. Seneca declares that Macenas passed three years without sleeping a single hour; and Boerhaave affirms that he passed six weeks at one time without sleep; but neither of these statements is credible.

Blaine was informed by Gen. Pichegrew that during his active campaign in Holland he never for a year slept more than one hour in twenty-four; and the same is related of Charles the Twelfth, during his wonderful career. Jeremy Taylor, during part of his life, slept only three or four hours in the twenty-four; and Napoleon slept only four or five hours during his military career; but he was able to fall asleep at any time in the midst of his work when he felt drowsy. John Hunter, the great surgeon, slept four hours at night and one after dinner.

Sir John Sinclair gives the history of a man who had reached the advanced age of ninety-one, and all his life had slept but four hours in the twenty-four. Sir Walter Scott had said that he was not entirely himself unless he passed seven hours in total unconsciousness. Southey required ten hours, going to bed at ten and rising at eight. Sir William Jones laid down the rule of life for students in the couplet:

"Seven hours to books, to pleasant slumbers seven,
Ten to the world allot, and all to heaven."

He Could Not Pray.

Ferdinand Christian Baur has long been known as the founder of the Tubingen School of Theology in Germany. The celebrated Strauss was his pupil, but in this case the pupil is said to have molded the opinions of his master. At least after 1835, when Strauss' Life of Christ, with its "mythical" skepticism, appeared, Baur's views underwent a radical change. He had been a popular preacher before. In 1830 he preached an eloquent sermon at the jubilee of the Augsburg Confession, and again in 1833 he made a great impression by a sermon which he preached on "reconciliation through Christ." But after 1835 he ceased to preach, perhaps from the honest conviction that he could no longer do so conscientiously.

But in abandoning his earlier faith Baur must have abandoned the hopes which it inspired. A distinguished German professor, once his pupil, has related as perfectly authentic an affecting anecdote in connection with his experience. Baur had a tenderly-beloved wife; she was long ill, and he had waited upon her with unwearied attention and care. When near her end she asked him to pray for her. Baur felt he could not; he had lost his faith in the efficacy of prayer; perhaps he did not believe in a Hearer of prayer. Accordingly he sent for a minister, who offered up a fervent prayer both for him and his wife.

Baur was deeply affected by her death; his hair is said to have turned gray. Whether the event had any permanent religious influence, and whether it even tended to recall him in the direction of his earlier belief, we cannot tell. But it is a significant commentary on the practical bearing and value of the theology of that school of which he was the reputed head. Drifting away from the anchorage of his earlier convictions, he sadly illustrated the gloom and cheerlessness of his later faith, or rather skepticism, by sealing his own lips at a moment when the instinctive desires of his dearest earthly friend summoned him to pray.—New York Observer.

AN OLD MAN is like an old wagon—with light loading and careful usage it will last for years; but one heavy load or sudden strain will break it and ruin it forever. Many people reach the age of fifty, sixty or even seventy, measurably free from most of the pains and infirmities of age, cheery in heart and sound in health, ripe in wisdom and experience, with sympathies mellowed by age, and with reasonable prospects and opportunities for continued usefulness in the world for a considerable time. Let such persons be thankful, but let them also be careful. An old constitution is like an old bone—broken with ease, mended with difficulty. A young tree bends to the gale; an old one snaps and falls before the blast. A single hard lift, an hour of heating work, an evening of exposure to rain or damp, a severe chill, an excess of food, the unusual indulgence of any appetite or passion, a sudden fit of anger, an improper dose of medicine—any of these, or other similar things, may cut off a valuable life in an hour, and leave the fair hopes of usefulness and enjoyment but a shapeless wreck.—Popular Science Monthly.

Religious Intelligence.

DURING the recent disturbances at Buenos Ayres the archbishop's palace was sacked, and the houses of the Jesuits were set on fire.

QUESTIONS on the International series of Sunday school lessons are printed monthly in the Arevdaper, of Constantinople, published in Armenian, Armeno-Turkish and Greco-Turkish languages.

MR. BAIRD, the great iron-master of Cambusdoon, Scotland, who gave $2,500,000 to the Established Church of Scotland, intends, it is said, to give the same amount to the non-established churches.

AT THE last meeting of the New Testament revisers in the Jerusalem chamber seven members were present, and the company considered proposals of the American revisers on the version of the Gospel of Luke, and revised, for the second time, the version of the first chapter of John.

THE Independence Belge states that at Buenos Ayres a church calling itself "Christian, apostolic, universal," has been opened by Dr. Emilio Castro-Boedo, until now a Roman Catholic priest. Other ecclesiastics have joined him, and many persons have signed a declaration concerning church reform. Dr. Emilio Castro-Boedo and his committee are in correspondence with the Old Catholics of Europe, and desire to proceed in full accord with them.

THE friends of the American Tract Society celebrated its fiftieth year in Washington, April 4. Judge Strong, of the Supreme Court, presided. The Rev. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Christian Weekly; the Rev. Dr. Bush, of the American Board, and others, made addresses. The total receipts have exceeded $12,700,000, of which one-third was from donations and legacies. The expenditures for grants, colportage and the foreign mission press have exceeded the entire benevolent receipts.

A DISCOVERY of great interest to Egyptologists and antiquarians generally is reported from Port Said. A learned archæologist in that place has just found a monumental stone to Thothmes the Third, under whose reign (1491 B. C.) the exodus of the Israelites is supposed to have taken place. The inscriptions already deciphered contain more than four hundred geographical names, all recognizable, and for the most part belonging to Arabia, Armenia, Nubia and the coasts of the Mediterranean.

THERE is news from Zanzibar that a native insurrection has broken out at Mombaza, a port one hundred and forty miles north of the town of Zanzibar and a mission station. Fears were entertained for the safety of the missionaries. At the request of the Sultan of Zanzibar an English naval ship sailed for the place January 15, in addition to a troop of two thousand men dispatched to Mombaza by the Sultan himself. A missionary paper sent out by the Church of England went to Mombaza last autumn.

THE station of the Church Missionary Society, Metakahtla, is situated on the borders of Alaska. Indians from this American territory have visited the station and have shown great interest in the gospel. From the island, four hundred and fifty miles to the north, earnest appeals have been made to be taught as the Tsimpheans are at Metakahtla. The Greek Church formerly had missionaries in Alaska, but has recently withdrawn them. The Roman Catholics have one missionary stationed in that territory.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND BLISS, in this country, seem to be destined to accomplish a great revival work. Their success in Louisville, Ky., has been remarkable. Mr. Whittle delivers the addresses, and Mr. Bliss, so well known as the author of many of our Sunday school songs, sings at intervals appropriate pieces. The pair of evangelists have been invited by the Evangelical Ministerial Association of Cincinnati to visit that city. These latter gentlemen are citizens of Chicago, and are pursuing a course similar to that which has marked Mr. Moody's career in Great Britain.

JUDGE GREENE, lately deceased, left by will to our church for the support of Sunday schools in Rhode Island $50,000 of the six per cent. bonds of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Massachusetts. In addition to this he has made the church residuary legatee. It is estimated that the amount that the church will come in possession of at once, or upon settlement of the estate, will be from $60,000 to $100,000, making the whole amount of the fund from $110,000 to $150,000. The presiding elder of the Providence district is designated to receive the property.

TWO JAPANESE CHRISTIANS—Okuno, elder of a church at Yokohama, and Ogawa, elder of a church at Yedo—have been cited before the government to answer the charge of having officiated at a Christian burial, in violation of the law which requires all funeral ceremonies to be conducted by a Buddhist or Shinto priest. In the course of the three examinations which have been held (the case was not yet decided when the letter left Japan) the magistrate expressed himself severely against Japanese subjects who were not content to learn about Christianity, but broke the law by professing the forbidden religion.

BISHOP WELLES, of Wisconsin, preached in Lodi, Wis., lately. There is no Episcopal church there, and the Presbyterian church was offered for the service, the Presbyterian choir also giving its services in conducting that part of the worship. But it is amusing, says the Presbyterian, to note how carefully the correspondent who describes the services avoids connecting the words "church" and "Presbyterian" together. It was the "Presbyterian house of worship" that was "loaned." It was "the choir of the Presbyterian organization" that "rendered" the chants. The good manners seem to have been all on the Presbyterian side.

THE full particulars of the massacre of Protestants at Acapulco show it to have equaled in ferocity anything in the bloodiest annals of the persecuting ages. Some thirty assassins, in the interest of the Roman Catholics, at a preconcerted signal, took their places in the church, which was filled with worshipers, and commenced an indiscriminate massacre, which lasted some six minutes. Escape into the street was certain death at the hands of the murderers lying in wait outside, as was shown by the actual facts. Our government has made some inquiry into the matter, and has stationed a war vessel at Acapulco. It is announced that the Mexican government is not to be held responsible for the catastrophe.

SAYS the London Primitive Methodist: "The board of guardians at Leigh are very zealous for the Parliamentary church faith, and scrupulously avoid interfering with the creed of the paupers under their care, when it suits their purpose. In the early part of March a minister of the Primitive Methodist Church applied to the board for a young girl as a domestic servant. It does not appear that the minister had any intention of interfering with the creed of the girl, but the board, by a majority vote, decided that, as the girl went to the State church, she could not be permitted to go to service in a Non-conformist minister's house, and therefore rejected the application.

PALESTINE.—Another statement says the evangelical churches, which have long had an existence in Jerusalem, now number about 400 members of different nationalities. Divine worship is held on the Sabbath in seven places, in four different languages, besides meetings for prayer, and the study of the Bible during the week, which are well attended. There is a respectable evangelical church in Nazareth, and several villages in the vicinity have evangelical schools. The number of native Protestants in Galilee is from 500 to 600, and there are as many children in schools. This evangelical mission work in and around Nazareth is superintended by Mr. Zeller, a German missionary, aided by two native deacons and a German catechist. The number of children taught in Protestant schools in all Palestine is estimated at 1,400.

HOW MOODY AND SANKEY CAME TO GO TO ENGLAND.—Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge, a wealthy English Wesleyan layman, brought into the enjoyment of religion through the labors of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, in 1859, made the tour of this country in 1873. He spent about six months visiting the chief towns and places of principal interest. While in this city he made his home at Dr. Palmer's. In Chicago he met Mr. Moody, and invited him to go to England, and doubtless offered to meet the expenses incident to such labor. Before Moody reached Newcastle, however, Mr. Bainbridge had sunk under the influence of fever, and gone to his home in the better land. His brother, Mr. Thomas Bainbridge, also a most estimable Wesleyan Methodist, met Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and gave them the heartiest of welcomes. The great work of the American evangelists in Scotland, Ireland and England has followed, or, rather, is following, for the end is not yet.—New York Christian Advocate.

ROMANISM IN MEXICO.—A few years ago the rule of the Catholic Church in Mexico was almost absolute. It controlled a revenue of $12,000,000 annually, derived from taxes or tithes and the rentals of real property. It crushed out the life of progress, and kept the people in the densest kind of ignorance, hardly one in a thousand of the peons being able to read. But a change has come, one of the incidental yet important results of the Maximilian invasion. The extent of this revolution may be inferred from the fact that by a recent vote of the Mexican Congress the order of nuns called Sisters of Charity has been broken up and the sisterhood ordered to disperse; and this is the last of those orders upon which the government has laid its hand, the others—and they were almost innumerable—having been previously disbanded. It is stated that prior to the French occupation these orders and the church owned fully one-third of the land in Mexico. To illustrate the character of these institutions, a correspondent, writing from the City of Mexico, states that "most of the friars have become brigands and gamblers, and many of the former nuns are now leading a life of open shame."—The Standard.

THE Rev. M. B. Kirkpatrick, D. D., of Dublin, writes of a feature of the revival movement under Messrs. Moody and Sankey which we had not seen remarked upon before: "The labors of these evangelists are said to have produced a deep impression on not a few of our Roman Catholic friends. Many of them, it is believed, attended the services in the Exhibition building, and listened with respectful attention to the gospel message. They never heard the word 'popery,' and scarcely ever even the word Protestantism spoken from the platform; but they heard the truth which is taught to Protestants. They learned, many of them perhaps for the first time, that the Protestant faith is not a mere protest against the Church of Rome, that it is not a mere negation, that it is a creed declaring as its main truth that there is no other name whereby sinners can be saved but the name of Jesus only. They had also the opportunity of learning, in listening to the prayers and addresses from the platform, that there is essential agreement among the various sections of the Protestant community in the truths which concern the salvation of the soul; and that they have been utterly mistaken in supposing that Protestants are as much divided among themselves as they are divided from the Church of Rome. It now remains to be shown that Protestantism is a reality, and that faith in Christ is manifested by love to men as well as by love to God. The teaching of our American visitors has demonstrated that it is the truth spoken in love which is the most effective instrument for subduing the prejudices and winning the hearts of our Roman Catholic countrymen."

The Word Asked For.

A good brother, writing from an important pastorate in Mississippi, wishes us to say "a word about whisky." Our paper has occasional selections from the best sources on this subject. Last year Sir John Barley Corn got his lines pretty fully in connection with the discussion on the new rule, and we had supposed enough had been published to satisfy all for a long time to come. We do not know what trouble the brother is in, but we suppose some of his flock may be in danger from indulgence in the accursed thing, or that some of them are remotely connected with the traffic in some way. In the absence of specific information we must be general in the word we have to say, and strike somewhat at random.

If there be whisky-makers or dealers in the church, and if after due reproof they will not mend, then let them be dealt with as offenders. If there be drunkards in the church, the way to dispose of them is clear. If the trouble is to get rid of whisky and intemperance in the community and in the world, we know of nothing better than to keep praying for the coming of God's kingdom, to preach earnestly the doctrines of retribution and holiness, and to warn and teach on this fearful evil of intemperance. The world will certainly become sober in proportion as it becomes regenerated by the gospel and by the Holy Ghost. The only way to cure vice is to bring the soul under the power of divine truth. If any drink whisky as a beverage, and traffic in it for gain, they must surely be in the gall of bitterness, backsliders or never converted; or, if this be too strong, they are laboring under a most grievous and mischievous delusion.

How could we would knock the head out of every whisky barrel, trample to death the worms of all the stills, banish up all the jugs, decanters, bottles and ticklers that hold the poison, and close every store, grocery and grog shop in which it is sold. We would banish it, to the last drop, from the world forever. True, it may be of value for medicinal, mechanical and scientific purposes, but these interests would survive the loss, and the world would be a thousand times happier than it is. But we cannot cast out this spirit of all uncleanness. It is in our world, and likely to stay as long as the devil remains. When the dragon, that old serpent, shall be finally cast into the lake of fire, we suppose that King Alcohol and the prince of darkness will go down together, and all impenitent whisky-sellers along with them perhaps.

It is an old, old story, this evil of drunkenness—nearly as old as the human race. It is one of the aspects of sin, one of the great vices of man and of society, and one of the elements arrayed against virtue and piety. It will be overcome when other sins are, and when all sin is conquered. What can be done? Preach the gospel, aim at the conversion of the people, enforce the discipline of the church, especially warn and instruct the young, and be careful to abstain from all appearance of evil. Preach the whole gospel; the whole duty of man and the necessity of the new birth. The love of money has much to do with intemperance. It is the root of all evil. It nurses and strengthens and promotes every vice, and this most of all. We cannot well kill sins in detail. They will all come down with the depraved tree that bears them, and drunkenness with the rest.

Must be Aroused.

A member of one of our patronizing Conferences writes as follows:

DEAR BRO.: Everything seems depressed. We are having more rain than usual. Crop prospects are gloomy; consequently the institutions of the church are not sustained for the fear that there will not be bread and to spare. Subscriptions to the ADVOCATE are taken reluctantly. Missionary money comes in slowly. The preacher's claim is always thought to be a matter of credit, and can be very easily paid at the end of the year; and if not, he will be more fortunate the next year, and fall into the hands of others that will care more for him. Will our people in the country ever learn to do their duty toward their preacher? I am not complaining myself; but I know of some good brethren in the ministry, devoting their lives with all the strength of manhood to the work, and scarcely receiving enough to keep starvation from entering and abiding. The church must be aroused on this vital question. Let our church papers speak out on the subject plainly, without any uncertain sound, and perhaps they will hear.

The above may have been for our own eye alone, but its publication may do some good. The preachers are not disposed to complain where the people do for them as well as they are able. Hardships must be expected in such times as these, but making due allowance for the straitened condition of the country, there is blame resting somewhere. The preachers are willing to suffer with their people, and cheerfully do they share their misfortunes, but it is shameful that they should be expected to bear more than their part of the burden. Why should the preacher's claim be thought a matter of credit, to be put aside until other claims are met? How can they wait until the end of the year who begin it with nothing in hand? No Methodist is worthy of the name who is not ready to divide his last dollar or his last bushel of corn with his pastor. How any can be content to live and dress well, while the preacher and his family are destitute, is beyond our comprehension.

The people are in fault—the church is withholding the laborer's hire. But the trouble is to fix the responsibility. There are always a few who come up to the measure of their ability. The stewards are generally blamed, but not always justly. The people, whatever this word may signify, think that it is the stewards' business to take care of the preacher and that they will do it somehow. But what can they do if the people do not come up promptly with their contributions? Much depends on the stewards, and may the Lord help them in their hard and often thankless task. Then the preachers themselves may be somewhat to blame. Have they done their duty, and especially have they expounded the Scriptures which bear upon the subject of religious giving? Conversion ought to reach the pocket; but there must be light as well as grace, knowledge as well as piety. We may not be able altogether to explain it, but it seems to be a fact that people may be very religious, after a certain type, and yet be very delinquent in the support of the gospel. We suppose they lack knowledge, and that they have not been faithfully instructed. Many preachers, most faithful in everything else, fail to declare the whole counsel of God in reference to giving, and we fear the blood of many a money-loving, miserly Methodist will be required at their hands.

But with multitudes it is not churlishness, we may hope, nor ignorance, but simply lack of thought—an unintentional negligence. They do not consider how the preacher gets along. They suppose somebody is looking after his wants, or they are waiting to be called on by the stewards. We would be extremely personal here. Supposing any of this class have the heart or taste to read this article—brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. Do not wait for the stewards, do not ask what Bro. Brown has done, do not imagine that God rains manna upon the parsonage lot, but go to the preacher and find out for yourself how it is with him and his family, and do all you can to help him. There are thousands of comfortable and well-to-do members of the church who should never have a night's sleep, nor quiet of conscience for an hour, until they have gone on this errand and devised something generous. There are some most able who do nothing. They love money and intend to keep it. Be it so. Those who are capable of thinking, and have the cause of Christ and the church at heart, must do the more. If without money, lend your credit to the preacher, even as you use it to clothe and feed your own family. If neither money nor credit is available, let the preacher draw on your crib and fields, flocks and smokehouse, as long as you have anything of the kind.

Our brother says: "The church must be aroused on this vital question." We wish we could arouse it. "Let our church papers speak out on the subject, without any uncertain sound." They do this very thing, and perhaps some good comes of it. Get the people into the way of reading our church papers more, and they will promptly do better. A man who has not religion enough, and interest enough in church affairs to take an Advocate, is likely enough to be without the grace of giving. Those who need stirring up most probably do not read our church papers. Intelligent, reading, well instructed Christians are usually considerate, generous and thoughtful of their pastor's welfare. We suspect the order is about as our correspondent puts it: "Subscriptions to the ADVOCATE taken reluctantly; missionary money comes in slowly; the preacher's claim a matter of credit—paid at the end of the year, and if not—." People who do not read do not give. As to the hard times, we hope the country has touched bottom, and that with better crops and better consciences the people will take better care of the preachers. Let us, at any rate, hope and pray for brighter skies, and a genuine awakening on the subject of supporting the gospel.

Publicly and Quarterly.

There are four collections to be made in every congregation for connectional purposes, to wit: Foreign missions, domestic missions, the fund for the support of worn out preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, and the Bishops' fund. In some instances collections are ordered by the Annual Conferences for educational purposes, for the Bible cause and for Sunday schools, but the four above mentioned are connectional and by authority of the General Conference. It is not optional with the preachers whether they shall take them or not, nor has any board of stewards a right to interfere with the presentation of these claims to the congregation. The amount apportioned to each charge is to be raised, or at least attempted, though the plan is left to the wisdom of the pastor and his stewards.

With very few exceptions the best plan is a public collection in the congregation by which all are instructed in reference to the object, and all are given an opportunity to contribute. If we could obtain the money in a private way, or from sources outside the usual ones, we would not do it. It is a wrong to any people to be deprived of this means of grace, and of the information concerning these important interests of the church. Some pastors, fearing the effect of public collections on their own support, may raise something by private solicitation from a very few individuals, or contribute themselves a mere pittance, so as not to come up with a blank report, but the result is usually meager and the moral effect bad. We believe strongly in the public collection, in its educational effects on the people and in its spiritual benefits. No collection should be attempted without cards, or frequently it may be better to call for subscriptions to definite propositions. Sometimes it might be well to call the roll of members, and get a response from each. Never go on the supposition that people have in their pockets the amount they ought to give, and the less chance for dodging the better, even with the best of us.

Besides regarding the public collection as preferable, we would also insist on taking one of these four collections every quarter. Put the most important, as to the amount required, at such periods of the year as are likely to be most favorable; but, as there are four objects to be separately presented, let one be attended to every three months. It is of no use to watch the clouds. If we do we shall never sow. Times are always hard, and by crowding everything into the last quarter there is loss to the whole. Other churches make their collections in this systematic way, and they find it to their account to do so. So it should be with us. Pay but little attention to the financial condition of the country, to the crops, the drouth, floods or worms. Make the appeal in its order and time, and let the people give as God has prospered them. The total of all the collections will be increased largely by this course.

The financial condition of a church—church building and repairs—indebtedness to the pastor, peculiar local embarrassments, should ordinarily have no bearing upon the question of stated collections. Very naturally these circumstances may affect the amounts, but something can be raised and should be. As a matter of course, every church and every member is expected to give something. If a man cannot afford a nickel, let him get the postmaster to turn it into coppers or one-cent stamps, and give one of them. While building a new house you do not stop going to market, and because you have a doctor's bill to pay you do not tell the flour dealer that he must give you bread for nothing. Our Bishops must be supported, the widows and orphans must be helped, our missions are necessary to our very existence. We cannot put off these claims. They must be met, even as we meet every other necessary demand—promptly and to the extent of our ability.

John Quincy Adams.

The memoirs of this remarkable man, edited by his distinguished son, Charles Francis Adams, furnish passages of great interest and instruction. Under the date of Christmas, in his diary, he comments with remarkable candor on the traits of his children, as well as his own:

"No attendance at the office. I gave the day to relaxation, and, with a view to make an experiment upon the taste of the younger part of our present family, after breakfast I read aloud Pope's Messiah, a poem suited to the day, and of which my own admiration was great at an earlier age than that of my son Charles, the youngest person now in my family. Not one of them, excepting George, appeared to take the slightest interest in it; nor is there one of them who has any relish for literature. Charles has a great fondness for books and a meditative mind, but neither disposition nor aptitude for public speaking or correct reading. Charles must teach himself all that he learns. He will learn nothing from others. Literature has been the charm of my life, and, could I have carved out my own fortunes, to literature would my whole life have been devoted. I have been a lawyer for bread, and a statesman at the call of my country. In the practice of the law I never should have attained the highest eminence, for the want of natural and spontaneous eloquence. The operations of my mind are slow, my imagination sluggish, and my powers of extemporaneous speaking very inefficient. But I have much capacity for and love of labor—habits, on the whole, of industry and temperance—and a strong and almost innate passion for literary pursuits. The business and sometimes the dissipations of my life have in a great measure withdrawn me from it. The summit of my ambition would have been by some great work of literature to have done honor to my age and country, and to have lived in the gratitude of future ages. This consummation of happiness has been denied me. The portion of life allotted to me is that of my mortal existence; but, even in this failure of my highest objects, literature has been to me a source of continual enjoyment and a powerful preservative from vice. It would have been a great comfort to me if all or either of my children inherited this propensity. George is not entirely without it. The others have not, and I have found every effort to stimulate them to it hitherto fruitless. Pope says, 'Tis education forms the common mind,' and so it is; but the common mind will be always grovelling in common objects. Then common mind must form itself."

In March, 1821, Mr. Adams expresses the following opinion of Henry Clay, which, considering the intimate relations between the two statesmen a few years afterward may be regarded as one of the curiosities of political life:

"Clay is an eloquent man, with very popular manners and great political management. He is, like almost all the eminent men of this country, only half educated. His school has been the world, and in that he is a proficient. His morals, public and private, are loose, but he has all the virtues indispensable to a popular man. As he is the first very distinguished man that the Western country has presented as a statesman to the Union, they are proportionately proud of him, and, being a native of Virginia, he has all the benefit of that chimnish preference which Virginia has always given to her sons. Clay's temper is impetuous, and his ambition impatient. He has long since marked me as the principal rival in his way, and has taken no more pains to disguise his hostility than was necessary for decorum and to avoid shocking the public opinion. His future fortune and mine are in wiser hands than ours. I have never, even defensively, repelled his attacks. Clay has large and liberal views of public affairs, and that sort of generosity which attaches individuals to his person. As President of the Union his administration would be a perpetual succession of intrigue and management with the Legislature. It would also be sectional in its spirit, and sacrifice all other interests to those of the Western country and the slaveholders. But his principles relative to internal improvements would produce results honorable and useful to the nation."

How to Raise Money for Foreign Missions.

Under this head an esteemed friend of ours furnishes an interesting article to the Nashville Christian Advocate, from which we make the following extracts:

1. Do not regard the assessment for your charge as the measure of your efforts, but simply as the base line—the line below which you must not come—the low-water mark for this stream of benevolence.

2. Do not commit the duty of raising money for this cause to private collectors. Other collections of prescribed amounts may and often should be raised in this way, but not this one.

3. Do not rely wholly on your own private efforts from house to house. Some may succeed well in this way, but not many, as I think on this plan many will be missed who attend preaching and would contribute.

4. Do not simply take a basket collection after preaching. Too many will give cents who ought to give dollars. The collection will be too small.

5. Do not simply send round papers in the congregation for a subscription. This will be better than the basket collection above referred to, but still the desired result will not be reached.

6. "I show unto you a more excellent way." 1. When you have a good congregation preach a sermon, as able and earnest as you can, on the subject of giving to the whole world the gospel of Jesus Christ. 2. After preaching take up a subscription, stipulating that the money subscribed may be paid at once, or within a given time, as may best suit the subscribers. Take the subscription in the pulpit, calling for propositions—or for the names of such as will give the largest amounts—or making propositions yourself, the size of the propositions, whether for individual contributions of $100, or $50, or $25, or $10, or $5, depending on the general ability of the congregation. When all the propositions started are carried in this way as far as may be, then send around your best collectors, or go yourself, with the subscription papers, to take the names, with annexed amounts, of the whole congregation. 3. Let this be done at every preaching place.

7. This grand central contribution should be supplemented by private applications to absent ones, by missionary boxes, etc.

8. Let every Sunday school be in itself a missionary society. The collection will thus be increased, and the children at the same time be taught to give.

An Impressive Scene.

During a ministry which has now compassed a score of years we have never witnessed a more inspiring and impressive scene than that which transpired in the Mulberry Street church in this city (Macon, Ga.,) on Sunday night, April 18. After the administration, amid profound solemnity, of the ordinance of baptism to between twenty and thirty candidates, the spacious altar-rail was surrounded, two deep, with candidates for church membership, who were received by the pastor, Rev. Arminius Wright, according to the simple yet solemn and impressive form laid down in the Book of Discipline. There were between sixty and seventy received—the precise number does not occur to us just now. Of this brave company there were less than a half dozen who were unable from personal experience to testify to the power of Christ to forgive sins, and these had furnished satisfactory evidence of their sincere "desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins." The immense concourse, crowding the lower floor and galleries, were hushed into profoundest silence, and gazed reverently upon the solemn scene—a scene which, while it thrilled the Christian hearts present, doubtless kindled new rapture amid the on looking hosts of the heavenly world. After the "right hand of fellowship" had been extended to these new members with more than usual freedom and cordiality, and they had resumed their seats, an invitation to penitents was responded to by a larger number than we had previously noticed at any one time during the meeting, and before the service closed several professed to find peace in believing in the Lord Jesus. It was a truly remarkable occasion, which we trust will be influential upon the future life of every one who witnessed it.

Circumstances having forbidden a number of candidates from presenting themselves on Sunday night, and almost daily applications for membership being made to the pastor, we hope to witness yet another such scene before this wonderful visitation of divine grace shall pass by.—Southern Christian Advocate.

REV. JOEL T. DAVES, superintendent of our missions, reached New Orleans on Thursday, April 29. Bro. Daves has spent the past month in Texas, traveling, preaching and lecturing in the interest of the Mexican mission. He was received most cordially, and much interest was manifested in the cause. Bro. Daves was unexpectedly called to New Orleans by family affliction before completing the tour which he had proposed. He had expected to leave for Mexico May 15, but circumstances may delay his departure until the first week in June. On last Sunday Bro. Daves preached at Louisiana Avenue at eleven A. M., and at the Felicity Street church at night.

WE HAVE but one moment at once; let us improve it.

Workmen Buried.

The following note from Bro. Waugh, of the Holston Conference, tells of the death of two faithful laborers:

MORRISTOWN, TENN., April 29, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. John M. Crismond, a venerable member of the Holston Conference, was buried near this place yesterday. He was born and raised in the city of Baltimore, and had been a member of this Conference nearly thirty-eight years, having joined it in 1837. He was a holy, pure and useful minister, and greatly beloved; was this year in charge of Morristown circuit. Eleven ministers were present at his funeral. We have lost two ministers in two weeks. Rev. G. W. Martin, of Bakersville circuit, was caught in the machinery of a mill and so badly crushed that he died in a few days; he also was a laborious and successful man. God hurles his workmen, but carries on the work. Say to my brethren in the Alabama Conference that God's cause is prospering gloriously in Holston. Yours,

H. P. WAUGH.

PASTORAL CALLS.—In a little paper issued in connection with the work of the Wellesley church in Massachusetts, an old contributor, Rev. G. S. Phipps, says these good things about pastoral calls:

"Comparatively small value do we attach to these as a mere parish formality. The 'going from house to house,' unless it result in a true acquaintanceship and unvailing of the heart, is but wasted time and effort. A pastor cannot afford mere gossiping calls. He had better be in his study, or even off trouting. But the calls that are valuable, both to himself and his people, which will enable him to 'preach better,' both in the pulpit and out of it, are calls in which the truest and deepest emotions of the soul come to the surface. Therefore be frank with your minister. Tell him your religious thoughts and feelings plainly, clearly, honestly. Through such a call he will know you better, understand your needs spiritually, be better able and far more likely to speak the 'word in season' for your advantage.

"Such a coming together, too, is just as valuable if it take place on the sidewalk or in the cars. Some of the most valuable 'ministerial calls' ever made have had for witnesses only the jolting seat of a wagon load, or the dusty beams of an old barn, or the steaming kettles of the kitchen stove, and apologized-for 'looks' of the unswept room, or the old woodpile where we caught the man with his 'frock' on, and in a twinkle got our hearts together—for the moment thought only of the one fact of our being travelers to eternity together, who might help each other. Such pastoral calls can never lose the gold out of them. Their memory will make heaven itself the sweeter. Would that we could make more of them! Ah! it takes two to make such calls as those. You must call on the pastor the same time he calls on you."

REV. R. G. PORTER, presiding elder of Macon district, North Mississippi Conference, writing April 26, says:

Our people are suffering greatly. The indications are for a good crop this year. I am now making the second round on my district, and find the finances of the church in a low condition. Some of the preachers are pressed to the last to live, yet they are cheerful and full of hope for a good year's work. No set of men in the world bear financial embarrassment as cheerfully as Methodist preachers. They can go down to the last crumb and last dime in cheerful dependence upon the good providence of God. I am just home from a visit to a cheerful pastor who is in great distress.

WE HAVE received, says the Western Methodist, the sad news of the death of our old friend and brother, Rev. John H Mann, formerly of the Tennessee Conference, but for a long time laboring in the Arkansas Conference, and last year in the Indian Mission Conference. He died in the faith, at his residence in Stone county, Ark., April 12, in his sixty-sixth year. He was a holy, self denying, zealous and useful itinerant—one of the old-fashioned pioneers of Methodism, thoroughly conversant with the Holy Bible and Methodist theological works.

THE Western Methodist of May 1 says: "Our associate, Bro. Blew—the children's 'Uncle Bob'—has been absent since April 19. A letter from him, written in New Orleans, will be found in another column. He sent us a dispatch on Tuesday last, from Cedar Keys, Fla., with intelligence of the death of his relative, Mr. James W. Robbins, to care for whom was the object of the visit to Florida. Bro. Blew started home on Tuesday, and is expected at the close of this week."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet in the Pine Street Presbyterian church, St. Louis, Mo., on the third Thursday (twentieth day) of May, 1875, at eleven o'clock A. M. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. J. L. Girardeau, D. D., moderator of the last Assembly.

THE State of Pennsylvania spent during the year 1870, for liquors of all kinds, $152,633,945, and for school and school purposes, $55,-860,420. She has engaged in the liquor business 78,000 persons, and but 16 870 school teachers. Her statistics show 24,000 criminals, four-fifths of whom were made so by drink.

REV. J. B. WAKELEY, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died recently in New York. He was the author of "Lost Chapters of Methodism," and other popular works.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The trustees of the Seashore camp ground, with friends and tenters, met on the camp ground, agreeably to public announcement, on the third and fourth instant, to make arrangements for the camp meeting of 1875, which will commence on Wednesday, the fourteenth day of July, and continue eight to ten days.

A goodly number of lots were selected and appropriated by the board for the erection of private tents. Other persons not there present can inspect the plan of the grounds and secure desirable lots by application to either of the trustees: William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; or W. H. Foster, J. H. Kellor, G. W. W. Goodwyn, R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran and B. O. L. Rayne, New Orleans.

The grounds are being put in order, and all necessary preparation made for a more extended gathering than at any previous meeting.

A full statement from the trustees, for the information of all parties, may be expected in our next issue.

ATTACK ON CHRISTIANS AT BEYROUT.—The London Times publishes the following account, from a correspondent in Beyrout, of an attack on the Christians of that town, and of an assault on the English consul in Damascus:

"On the morning of Tuesday, the ninth of March, a great number of Mohammedans of both sexes and of all ages, armed with knives, sticks and stones, assembled in a suburb of Beyrout and assaulted every Christian they met, breaking the windows of the houses they passed. As all the Christian men of that part (chiefly the laboring classes) were either at work or attending the Lent services in the churches, the women and children were unprotected, and shut themselves up in their houses, fearing that such another massacre as occurred in 1860 was imminent. The roads being in possession of their assailants, there was no means of communicating with the authorities, and the riot continued far more than two hours before any help arrived. At length a body of police came up, and endeavored, but in vain, to drive back the mob, and were forced to retreat a considerable distance. Eventually they were reinforced by a number of horse and foot soldiers, and succeeded in clearing the streets."

MAN'S UNHAPPINESS, as I construe, comes of his greatness; it is because there is an infinite in him, which, with all his cunning he cannot quite bury under the finite. Will the whole finance ministers and upholsterers and confectioners of modern Europe undertake, in joint stock company, to make one shoeblack happy? They cannot accomplish it above an hour or two; for the shoeblack also has a soul quite other than his stomach. The within me have unhappiness is somewhat thus: By certain valuations and averages, of our own striking, we come upon some sort of average terrestrial lot; this, we fancy, belongs to us by nature, and of indefeasible right. It is simply payment of our wages, our deserts; requires neither thanks nor complaints; only such overplus as there may be do we account happiness; any deficit again is misery. Now consider that we have the valuation of our own deserts ourselves, and what a fund of self-conceit there is in each of us. Do you wonder that the balance should so often dip the wrong way?"—Carlyle.

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN completed his seventieth year on the second day of April, and all the world paid him homage. The King sent on the first day of the month, one of the royal carriages for him to convey him to the palace, where he conferred the Grand Cross of Dannebrog on his illustrious subject. On the next day the princes of the royal family called on him, as also did deputations from all parts of the country, and among them the committee which has collected funds for his statue. Among his presents was a volume containing one of his stories in fifteen languages. Telegrams poured in on him from foreign lands. Blessings on the head of the dear old man! If his stories have charmed the young, he has charmed the old still more by the most beautiful product of his life—the example of his sweet, affectionate nature.—Methodist.

PAPISTS AND THE BIBLE.—In a recent letter from Italy, published by William Howitt, the author of "Visits to Remarkable Places" and other charming works, he says that since he has been in Italy he has seen Bibles snatched from the hands of colporteurs by priests and trampled in the dirt. In the rural districts even at this hour the colporteurs are driven out by the priests and the Bibles they have sold in the people are collected and burnt." And yet the Pope, in a recent appeal to these same priests, whines and cants about the "word of God" being "trodden under foot." Of course he was speaking metaphorically, but no metaphor is needed when describing the manner in which he and his ecclesiastics do deride to God's holy word.—Christian Intelligencer.

MUCH of our early gladness vanishes utterly from our memory; we can never recall the joy with which we laid our heads on our mother's bosom, or rode our father's back in childhood; doubtless that joy is wrought up into our nature as the sunlight of long past mornings is wrought up in the soft mellowness of the apricot.—George Eliot.

TRUTH wears well, and sits easy on the wearer; while new-fangled errors, like new-fashioned clothes, please for awhile, but pinch most hard for the sake of the fashion.

PAY POSTAGE.—Subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid at the old rates—viz.: two dollars per year—and whose subscriptions run into 1875, are required under the new postage law which goes into effect January 1, to pay postage at the office of mailing. The subscription price hereafter includes the postage. Two cents per month each month that the subscription has to run, will be sufficient to pay for the ADVOCATE.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

A COMFORTABLE SHOE.—The wire-screwed boot and shoe is fast taking the place of the sewed manufacture. That they possess many advantages over the latter cannot be denied. In the first place, they are more durable; in the second place, they can be made water-proof; and last, but not least they are cheaper. It has been urged that they injure socks by rust, but we are assured that it is not so in those that are well made. For the preservation of shape they far excel the sewed shoe; consequently they are more comfortable. If the reader wishes to test the economy and comfort of them, we know of no better place than John Hansen's, at No. 83 Canal street.

THE MARBLE WORKS of George Stroud, from 58 to 61 St. Charles street, are well known to the public. We take pleasure in saying that they have given, so far as we have had opportunity of seeing or hearing, universal satisfaction. No one who is a judge of fine work in marble can fail to appreciate the elegant specimens. Mr. Stroud will be found to be an estimable and clever gentleman to deal with.

HATS AND TRIMMINGS.—The late lamented Daniel Gorren had built up a most thrifty and prosperous business at the corner of Chartres and Canal streets. The establishment will be conducted as heretofore, and those wishing an outfit for themselves or children will find a large and elegant assortment from which to select. See advertisement.

TEXAS LANDS FOR EXCHANGE OR SALE.—We call attention to the advertisement of William McMaster, Esq., 75 Canal street, who offers for exchange or sale valuable plantations in some of the best portions of Texas. This affords a good opportunity for those who wish to dispose of their city property for a more productive estate.

FANCY DRY GOODS.—Purchasers of fancy dry goods, of either foreign or domestic manufacture, hosiery, embroideries, silks, linens, etc., should give attention to the advertisement of the Jackson store, corner of Chartres and St. Ann streets. Prompt attention to country orders assured.

AMONG worthy enterprises deserving success and substantial encouragement by the railroads, hotels and merchants generally of the city, we would direct attention to the New Orleans Semi Annual Trade Guide, so ably issued for the past nine years by Mr. D. Webster, No. 15 Camp street.

With a view of materially assisting the growth of the South American trade, the Guide has taken a new departure, and in connection with its regular fall publication, for the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Florida and Texas, proposes a new field of distribution, and a Spanish edition of the Guide, to be sent, through its agents, to all the Yucatan Islands, and the principal towns of South America, beginning at Vera Cruz, and embracing Tampico, Progresso, Merida, Mexico and all other points by which the commerce of New Orleans may be benefited.

To many Spanish-American houses, such as coffee, tobacco, sugar, oil and fruit dealers, having intimate business connections with the points above mentioned, will this be a particularly appropriate medium, and the opportunity so happily presents itself of being enabled to advertise in the language of the country that we think but few of our far-seeing merchants will be so blind to their own interests as to fail adopting this excellent means of communicating with their business friends, and opening and encouraging new avenues of trade.

The Guide has not only proved itself a credit to the city, and a remunerative advertising medium to its patrons, but its regular and handsome appearance gives to the merchants of the interior that confidence in our business men and city that is so justly deserved.

The Guide, as usual, will be handsomely embellished with cuts of the principal views and attractive places of the city, and the houses of our prominent business men.

We shall again have occasion to speak of this enterprise. Meanwhile we heartily commend it to the public, and hope to hear of its merited encouragement.

COTTON TIES.—Messrs. R. W. Rayne & Co., general agents for the celebrated Arrow Tie, deserve the gratitude of the cotton planters of the South for the revolution which they have been largely instrumental in effecting in the use of cotton ties when we consider the many disadvantages of the rope as a tie. Messrs. Rayne & Co. are worthy and as liable as well as enterprising gentlemen, and have the reputation of being fair and liberal in their transactions with customers.

DELICIOUS SODA WATER.—The citizens of the Fourth District are favored with fresh fruit syrups and delicious soda water at Eckleburg's, on the corner of Washington street and St. Charles avenue. See his advertisement and give him a call.

MR. EUGENE SIMON, photographer, 21 Hospital street, offers liberal terms to those who patronize him.

EMERSON'S TRADE MARK
DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, being careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelet-holes in last strip, draw them TIGHTLY, causing the steel strips to close on the papers like a vise, and fasten firmly by "relaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and index in front.

RATTLE-TE-BANG!

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

In doors or out, it was always the same—
Rattle-te-bang was the way that he came;
Now at the front door and now at the back,
If it don't open quick, give it a whack!

Yes, there's a knocker; but don't you suppose
He must be busy with fingers and toes?
Long before freedom its banner unfurled
He has been making a noise in the world!

Out of the bed he will go with a thump,
Making our hearts and the furniture jump;
Everything into confusion he sends—
Silence and he are not very good friends.

How he delights in the poker and tongs!
Close by an anvil is where he belongs;
There, in the midst of the clatter and clang,
He could go on with his rattle-te-bang.

Girls may be taught to be gentle and quiet—
They have no fancy for rumpus or riot;
But for their ear-splitting, rackeling noise,
I'm very sure that boys wouldn't be boys.

Scolding away at the terrible din,
Nobody thinks of the struggle within,
Nobody knows how ashamed the boy feels
Dragging old rattle-te-bang at his heels.

May be he'll learn to be quiet and kind
When on his manners he settles his mind,
Though just at present so deaf to harangue
And wholly devoted to rattle-te-bang!

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 7.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: In this week's ADVOCATE there is a letter from my little friend Florence, who lives in Shreveport, which the editor says he hopes I will not overlook, in which the little dear complains, in her polite way, that we are so long about getting to the story about "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." We must attend to this letter to-night, instead of hearing Tom discourse about moles. What shall we do about it?

"Why, grandpa, do you know who she is?"

Yes, Tom, I have an idea. You see the second childhood differs from the first in this: that it takes in all the little ones in the wide sweep of its love. I should like to have little Florence join our little circle. What do you say, Master Harry?

"It would be capital, grandpa; but do you think she could come?"

Hardly, but she might send us her picture, and we could put it on the table here before us every night, and then she could read the stories in the ADVOCATE, and that would be almost like having her among us. Suppose we ask her.

"But how can she send it, grandpa?"

Oh, that is easy enough. She can send it in a letter to the editor of the ADVOCATE, and he will send it to us, I am sure.

"Won't that be fun?" says Charlie.

Yes, I am sure of it; but we must do something now to make her certain to send it. What shall it be?

"Perhaps, grandpa," says Harry, "you had better tell the story she asked for."

I think I have a better plan than that. I will tell you a story especially on her account, and one which her letter brought to my mind, about a little girl of the same name whom I knew and dearly loved more than thirty years ago, when I was spending a winter in New York. I will call it

BEING A PROVIDENCE.

"Can't I be a Providence, papa?"

My friend, Mr. Hampton, put down his paper and looked over the rim of his spectacles. It was a pretty sight that met his eye. His little daughter Florence was gazing up in his face with a look of intense earnestness that he had never seen in her eyes before. She was a beautiful child, scarcely ten years old, with the brightest of blue eyes and the most golden of golden tresses. "Can't I be a Providence, papa?" she repeated as she met his usually rather stern gaze fixed upon her with an inquiring look.

"Be a what, my child?" he asked, drawing her nearer to him.

I almost thought he would take her into his arms, and wondered how he could help it; but my friend Hampton was a very stern sort of a man, and was usually so engrossed with business cares as to be almost blind to the beauties that were blooming all around him in his charming home.

"Be a Providence, papa?" and there was a wistful look in the blue eyes that the father could not withstand.

"What do you mean, my child?" he asked, taking the spectacles off and putting the paper quite away.

"Why, papa, you see little Nannie Trousdale, who goes to school with me, wears such poor clothes that most of the little girls don't like to play with her, because you see she is very poor; so she looks so sad, and cries all alone by herself. Well, the other day I went up to her, where she was sitting on the back door step of the school-house, with her face hid in her hands, and I said to her: 'Nanuie, don't cry;' but she looked up into my face and only cried the more. So I sat down beside her on the stone, and put my arm round her neck, and I cried too, just for company."

I was watching my friend Hampton very closely from the other side of the table where I sat, and I thought I saw just here a big tear roll out of his eye and run down his face. At any rate, he commenced coughing and looking for his handkerchief, and he stole a quick, half-ashamed glance across at me, as though he was afraid I would see him crying.

"And then you see, papa," continued Florence, "after we had cried awhile I took out my lunch from my pocket, and we sat there and ate it, and Nannie said she never had anything so good before, though it was only bread and butter, and an apple, which we each kept biting out of till it was all gone; and you see, papa, when we had finished I loved Nanuie more than I did before."

I am sure I was not mistaken this time, for Hampton had found his handkerchief, and—yes, he certainly was brushing away a tear. Perhaps, though, he was only crying for company. But he took the little darling up and sat her on his knee, and told her to go on with her story, and tell him what she meant by wanting to be a Providence.

"Why, you see, papa, after this Nannie and I were good friends, and yesterday after school I walked home with her, though I thought she was ashamed to have me know that she lived in so poor a place, and had so little; but she let me go up stairs with her, and a long way up it was too, papa, and the stairs were so narrow and dark I had to hold on to Nannie's hand to find the way, and when we got to the top I couldn't see any door at all, but Nannie knew where it was and opened it, and then it was light, but not very, for there was only one window, and it was a very small one. Nannie was holding my hand and she drew me in, and there I saw a very pale-looking lady sitting right under the window sewing; and, O papa, there was hardly anything in that room at all. The table was nothing but a barrel set upon end, and then there were two old beds, and one or two old chairs not half as good as those in our kitchen, and that was all; and on one of the beds was such a sick-looking man. I didn't want to go in when I saw how poor they were, for I knew then why Nannie was always so poorly dressed; but she drew me in and said: 'Mamma, here is Florence, who was so kind to me.' And Nannie's mamma put down her sewing and said: 'Come here, my darling;' and she drew me up to her and kissed me, and said: 'God will bless you, my child, for being kind to the poor.' And then I cried and Nannie cried, and the sick man beckoned me over to his bed, and took up my hand in his thin hand, and I told him I was sorry they were so poor and that he was sick, and he said: 'Providence will provide;' and then, papa, I thought of all the silver pieces I had been saving up for Christmas, and I said: 'I'll ask papa to let me be a Providence;' and they both said: 'No, no, I mustn't;' but you see, papa, I want to be one so much."

I looked over at my friend Hampton, and I am sure he saw me, but he bent down his head and actually kissed the little darling on the cheek, and then he looked across at me and said: "Shall we go and attend to this matter?" We went.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 4 feet 2 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirtieth ultimo:

Mississippi river and bayous	1,402
Red river	1,028
Ouachita river	49
Railroads	2,707
Lake	9
Mobile	481
Texas	412
Total	0,988

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, and nearly the whole of the day's business was done during the morning, the total being only 1,500 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity, a portion of the sales being fully up to previous rates, while in most cases, in order to realize, factors accepted offers which they had previously refused. On Monday, with nothing in the dispatches to have any favorable influence—Liverpool being reported quiet, with sales of 12,000 bales, and the New York market quiet at previous rates for spots, and easier for futures—the inquiry during the morning was limited, and the reported sales up to noon were confined to a little over 200 bales, after which the movement exhibited little more animation; but, as one buyer took 700 bales, the entire business embraced 1,850 bales. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, where the sales were only 8,000 bales, and of a falling off of 3 32d@32c. in futures at New York, where spots were dull at previous rates. The sales embraced 1,800 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,850 bales, against 6,950 for the corresponding time last week and 12,600 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 961,133 bales, against 1,139,650 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 230,031 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 232,129—3,354,849 against 3,586,778. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 11,557 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 40,945 to France and 177,841 to other foreign ports. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SHADINES—SHADINES.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Five years since, after previous years of experience in the propagation and preservation of Shadines, or young shad, we first introduced our fish to the American people.

Shadines are put up in hermetically-sealed tin boxes, perfectly boneless, in a mild, pleasing, appetizing sauce, palatable to all, free from oil (so objectionable in sardines,) retaining only the natural richness of the shad, and ready for the table at all times—for dinner, lunch or evening meal—by merely opening the box.

Bear in mind, we are the original and only packers of Shadines, and every genuine box has the letters H. & C. pressed on each side.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WILMINGTON, N. C., May 4.—Judge Brooks, of the United States District Court, in charging the grand jury today, decided that the civil rights bill in its criminal aspect, which was the only shape in which it could come before the grand jury, was unconstitutional and void.

MARSHALL, May 4.—A fire broke out at fifteen minutes past three this morning, in a block of stores northwest of the courthouse. Every building destroyed. Loss roughly estimated at $110,000; insurance from $50,000 to $55,000.

MONTGOMERY, May 5.—Moses, Democrat, for mayor, 484 majority; Smith, Democrat, for city clerk, 548 majority. The Democrats carry every ward, electing every alderman. Among the aldermen elected are Hon. George W. Stone, late justice of the Supreme Court, and Maj. Thomas G. Jones, whose memorial tribute to the Federal dead attracted so much notice at the North last year. Nearly half the colored people voted the Democratic ticket, straight, for the first time since reconstruction.

The city was illuminated last night, and amid cannon firing, band playing and general jubilation almost the whole night was passed. Men heretofore leading white Republicans were serenaded by the bands, and many speeches were made.

In the United States District Court and Circuit Court, Judge Bruck presiding, all cases under the enforcement acts were continued to await the decision of the Supreme Court in the Louisiana cases.

The grand jury of the courts, which was impanneled yesterday, consists of twenty Republicans and three Democrats.

Weather cool. Crops backward.

J. S. Peerin, late Republican member of the Legislature for Wilcox county, testified as follows before the committee now investigating the means by which Senator Spencer secured his election to the United States Senate: "Troops were retained in Alabama before the election on the requisition of myself and others, it having been understood that Spencer had arranged for troops to be put at the disposal of Mayer and other revenue officers wherever intimidation was necessary. These troops were accompanied by United States marshals, who had fictitious warrants with citizens' names prominently displayed, and shown to citizens who would inform; these were paraded in various counties. I shot a hole in my hat and reported that I had been attacked by Ku-Klux. I sent troops to arrest the mythical assailants. I kept the troops as long as I could use them as a political machine. Our purpose was to secure the Legislature at all hazards and elect Spencer."

A number of witnesses testify to the use of money to effect the same purpose.

NEW YORK, May 10.—The new Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church was dedicated yesterday. It seats two thousand one hundred persons and cost a million dollars.

SAN ANTONIO, May 11.—Gen. Edward Hatch, commanding the Ninth United States Cavalry, arrived here to-day and represents the condition of affairs on the Rio Grande as critical, and that summary measures must be taken to prevent the country lying between the Rio Grande and Nueces from becoming the prey of invaders and raiders.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 30, via Havana, May 7.—Congress has approved of the construction of railways from Vera Cruz to Zamarana, and from Guawjamas to a place on the northern frontier of Sonora. A subvention has been granted to the constructors of the Merida and Progresso railroad. A new colonization law has been passed, by which private parties are permitted to bring colonists into Mexico.

The revolution, which commenced in Michoacan in consequence of the publication of church reforms and of the expulsion of the Sisters of Charity, is extending and gaining ground in other States. Michoacan is suffering greatly; all business is paralyzed and the inhabitants are leaving.

The village of Jucuba has been pillaged and burned.

The Legislature of Michoacan, alarmed at the progress of the revolution, has been convoked in extra session, which commenced on the twenty-third instant. It will discuss measures for the extermination of the rebels. It was stated that the Legislature would grant the government of the State extraordinary powers for war, and the finance measures of the general government have been neglected to insure the pacification of the State. The strength of the rebels under Morelia is increasing, and is now estimated at two thousand five hundred men, divided into numerous factions.

LONDON, May 5.—Ewald, the German philologist, is dead.

Russia excludes American potatoes and sacks or cases which contained them.

The Pall Mall Gazette says a fresh note from Germany has arrived in Brussels. This note, the Gazette says, is in connection with a pastoral recently issued by the Bishop of Namur, which is extremely violent in its reference to the German government.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, May 5, via Havana.—A revolution broke out in Port-au-Prince on Sunday. Gen. Brice was dragged from church and shot. Forty foreigners have been killed. Among the victims is a servant of the British consul general. Buildings were fired and every species of disorder prevailed.

A state of siege has been proclaimed. A British gunboat is there and another will be sent there to-morrow. Steamers were not permitted to enter that port and have landed their cargoes here.

BERLIN, May 7.—The proceedings against the Prince Bishop of Breslau for violation of the ecclesiastical laws has resulted in his removal. He has been conducted to the Bohemian frontier.

SHANGHAI, May 7.—The American Methodist chapel at Quiekang was destroyed by a mob of Chinamen. The Chinese authorities have offered ample reparation for the outrage.

LONDON, May 8.—Intelligence of a shocking marine disaster has just reached this city. The Eagle line steamship Schiller, Capt. Thomas, which sailed from New York, April 28, for Hamburg, by way of Plymouth and Cherbourg, has been wrecked off the Scilly Isles. It is believed that two hundred persons have perished.

Later.—Additional particulars thus far received of the wreck of the steamship Schiller show that the disaster is fully as terrible as at first reported.

The accident occurred at ten o'clock last night, at which hour the steamship struck on the dangerous Retarriere ledges, near Bishop's Rock. A fog prevailed at the time. A boat belonging to St. Agnes, the most southern of the Scilly Islands, has landed some of the survivors of the wreck at St. Mary's island, another of the Scillys. These survivors were picked up while swimming with the tide. They had several narrow escapes from drowning, and were a number of times washed off a rock. They declare the number of lives lost by the disaster is two hundred. A fearful sea is raging, and it is scarcely possible for the boats engaged in searching for the survivors to live. The Scilly lifeboat has put off for the wreck.

BERLIN, May 9.—In the Lower House of the Prussian Diet the bill for the suppression of religious orders was read a second time without amendment, and the bill giving the Old Catholics a share of Roman Catholic church property passed its third reading, by a vote of 202 yeas to 75 nays.

The prince imperial, Frederick William, has returned to Berlin.

Instructions have been sent to the provincial authorities of Prussia to treat the collection of money for priests who have been subjected to legal penalties as a punishable offense.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 9.—The Czar departed at eight o'clock yesterday evening for Berlin.

LONDON, May 9.—All day long details of the Schiller disaster have been coming in. Unfortunately no more persons are reported to be saved. Bodies are constantly being picked up.

Among the bodies recovered are those of George Leonhard, Carl Schmidt, Mrs. Riederer and child, Mrs. Becker, Mrs. Ridgeway and Mrs. Hermine West, and five other men, five women and children.

Altogether, twenty-four bodies have been found.

The total number of lives lost is three hundred and eleven.

LONDON, May 10.—This morning's Telegraph, in an editorial article on the meeting of the Emperors of Russia and Germany, says: "It is impossible to conceal the truth. The continental situation wears this morning the very gravest aspect. If we were to say that the question of the future repose of Europe may be practically solved before forty-eight hours have passed we would scarcely go beyond the facts. The tendency at this hour is decidedly pacific."

The other London journals likewise comment upon the meeting, but the thought of war is generally discredited.

MR. EDITOR: Quite a number of your readers have responded to our moderate call. Some have responded to a circular letter asking for $1. Up to the present Bro. Bancroft and I have received $90. Our mission has raised $98, making in all $188. We sincerely thank our friends for their contributions and prayers. The ladies, who are always ready for every good work, have done nobly. Those who are struggling can appreciate kindnesses. Send your contribution of ten cents or $1 at once, and help us to pay the $1,000 debt that weighs so heavily upon us, and you shall not only have our prayers and good wishes, but the blessings of Heaven will be bestowed upon you; for "he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

Forward your contributions to Rev. Albert T. Tidwell or Rev. Josiah Bancroft, Vicksburg, Miss.

THE law of God cannot be annulled. The gospel is as much a rule of duty as the moral law. The gospel has created additional obligations. The mode of obedience to the law is not changed, but the motive. Dr. Sparrow.

From the Work.

WASHINGTON, ST. LANDRY PARISH, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We entered upon our work immediately after our return home from the Annual Conference, and it was soon apparent that Washington was the place for me and my family to reside. Another fact was also patent: that a house had to be obtained, either by renting or by purchase. My board of stewards was equal to the emergency, and after thoroughly canvassing the question, with a promptness truly commendable, purchased a comfortable house and grounds, which we immediately took possession of. But you very naturally ask: Is the parsonage paid for? We answer as follows: There are five installments, each of which will be promptly paid as it falls due.

Besides purchasing a parsonage, my stewards have devised liberally for the support of the ministry, and my people cheerfully acquiesce in all that has been done. The Conference and missionary claims will be attended to.

We have in Washington a very neat church, but certain repairs must be made now, inside and out, if we wish to save the property. The board of trustees will take this matter in hand immediately.

We have on our work brethren truly devoted to every interest of the church. In order to make the burden as light as possible on those brethren who are doing all they can, and to complete certain repairs that must now be made, we have concluded to apply for help outside of our charge. Those whom we have addressed on the subject have responded liberally. We wish to raise $200. Will not some of our friends in New Orleans send us immediate aid, or pledge themselves, by letter, to pay us a specified amount during the next Annual Conference, to be held in New Orleans? If they will aid us in either of these ways we can proceed. We await an early reply.

We have under consideration measures for building a neat church on Bayou Bœuf, seven miles from Washington. Of this more anon.

In conclusion, permit me to say that our reception on this work was of the most pleasant character. God bless the people! The Lord has blessed us in many ways. We are having large congregations and refreshing seasons from the presence of our heavenly Father.

ROBT. S. ISBELL, P. C.

MAY 6, 1875.

SOUTHEASTERN ARKANSAS.—Mr. Editor: I feel that I ought to give you the passing events of our section of the work in northeastern Arkansas.

1. April passed out with quite a wind over Harrisburg, Ark., on Friday night, uprooting the sturdiest oaks of the forest, unroofing outhouses, and tearing the fences and dead timbers down generally.

2. The spring so far has been very wet; waters high, and but little plowing could be done so far. Everything is backward and unpromising save the wheat crop. In that we have promise of a good harvest.

3. Our preachers are at their posts, trying to do what they can. Rain, high water, and scarcity of money and provisions have greatly hindered the labors of preachers and people in carrying out plans for building up the church; but much has been projected, and we hope as the season advances much may be accomplished for the good of the church.

4. My mission in the Bible work is greatly hindered by the great money pressure. Nothing can be done so long as this state of things continues to exist; and we can hardly hope to be relieved this year.

The growing crop, be it ever so good, cannot put our planters out of debt. Two crops will be needed, at least, to place the country in comfortable condition.

5. The political and civil condition of our section of the State is good; also the industrial. People generally are civil, frugal, and at work harder than ever before for thirty years past. We fear that the labor is not as much mixed with prayer as it should be. Yours truly,

J. M. STEEL.

MAY 1, 1875.

MARION, ALA.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed an interesting, and, we trust, profitable meeting at this place. We began with the second quarterly meeting held for this charge, and for the first week were aided by the valuable services of our presiding elder, the Rev. A. J. Briggs. Had it not been for the timely and efficient aid of our esteemed Bro. Raymond, pastor of the Presbyterian church at this place, we would have been without ministerial aid during the second week of our meeting. He and his people entered into the spirit of our services with a willingness and resolution that puts aside all sectarianism, and evinces the fact that souls are worth more than party distinctions. The services of this week were not without success, for several became deeply concerned, anxiously inquiring: "What must we do to be saved?"

The third week brought to our aid the efficient services of Rev. G. Waverly Briggs. His preaching was successful, under which many professed to have tasted the joys of pardoning grace.

As is common in such meetings, the church has been strengthened and revived. Our lines have been lengthened, and we all feel more cheerful and happy.

Twenty-one persons have applied for church membership, most of whom attend the Sabbath school. Others, we hope, are seriously considering this subject. We have not done all that we desired to do, and perhaps we may never do this; but there has been enough accomplished to cause us "to thank God and take conrage." Yours, etc.,

J. E. FOUST.

MAY 6, 1875.

CLOVER HILL CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor: Being returned to this work by the appointing power, I found myself here in due time, and entered upon my duties as best I could in the face of cold, rainy weather, and bad, indescribably bad roads. We are, properly speaking, without a house of worship on this work. We are kindly permitted to use a house in the town for preaching and Sabbath school for the present. How soon the owner may see fit to use it for some other purpose we know not. Certainly no people ever needed a house of worship more than we do here. Whether we will see one commenced this year or not I cannot say, but I will hope. As to the spiritual state of the church, I cannot say anything definitely; but, judging from the interest taken in the Sunday school, and the increased attendance on public worship, I conclude that the indications are good. Our temperance society stands unshaken amidst all the evil surroundings, and labors diligently to suppress the influence of that terror of terrors—drunkenness. I have collected $13.95 missionary funds, besides small amounts for other purposes. The ADVOCATE has many readers in this section. More anon.

T. B. WALDEN, P. C.

MAYERSVILLE, MISS., May 3, 1875.

DELHI CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Not being able to reach Tallulah for my appointment on the last Sunday in April, I preached at a private house six miles south of Delhi. For solemnity and spirituality I was reminded of the services that were held in my father's house in Kentucky, when I was a boy, by the old Methodist preachers. I received two persons into the church, and baptized one adult and two children.

Failing to reach my appointment at Delta on the first Sunday in May, I preached at the Delhi district camp ground. Congregation large; basket dinner; two sermons. Two persons received into the church. Mourners were called and came. Altar exercises were pleasant and profitable.

Let the entire district take notice that the district camp meeting will be held about September. Will each and every circuit and station have one or more tents?

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. C.

P. S.—The water is now failing so fast that I hope to be promptly at all my appointments in future.

B. F. A.

DELHI, LA., May 4, 1875.

RALEIGH CT., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Although the rains and high waters have very much impeded our ministry, or at least the work of the ministry, we held our second Quarterly Conference two weeks ago. On Sunday we had a large audience, and Bro. W. B. Hines preached with great acceptability. After the services from the stand the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. A collection was taken up for the Bishop, but it was small. Finances are very low in this country. I have taken up collections at several churches, and have got but little for the mission and Conference funds. The people of the Raleigh circuit are willing to divide with the preacher as far as they are able, and they promise to come up with their assessment in the fall. JOHN H. EVANS, P. C.

POLKVILLE, May 6, 1875.

Notes of the Field.

The Fiji Islands have recently passed under the protectorate of the English government. This is largely due to the wise persistence of William McArthur, Esq., M. P. for Lambeth. Annexation of Fiji was attempted in 1860, but was declined by the English government chiefly on account of a "want of union under one head of chiefs" in the islands. The March number of the Wesleyan Missionary Notices contains a portrait of Henry Maafu, who signed the deed of cession. As he is now an historic character, it may be well to know something of him and his antecedents. I gather from the Notices the following facts: He was born at Tonga about ten years before the memorable outpouring of divine grace in 1834. Maafu was the rightful successor of King George, who was one of the notable converts of that meeting. "but many years ago relinquished all claims in the Friendly Islands for much more valuable possessions in Fiji. Under the title of Tui Lau (King of Lau) he was placed at the head of the Lau Confederation; and, all but supreme in the windward half of the group, he became a formidable rival to Cakoban. When the Fijian government was formed the Confederate chiefs of Lau took the oath of allegiance to King Cakobau, and Maafu was appointed Viceroy of Fiji." Now let us learn something of the power and method of the missionary movement from the account of the Viceroy's conversion to Christianity.

"In his youthful days Maafu was wild and wayward. Ambition led him to many wars of conquest. He is a bold and energetic man, formed to be a leading spirit, and has had great influence on Fijian affairs. He is now about fifty years of age. The preaching and pastoral teachings of the Rev. Joel Bulu were made a blessing to Maafu, and after his conversion he became an earnest and liberal Christian, always willing to help the missionary. The Rev. Joseph White has often given testimony to his humble, devout and consistent conduct during times of great trial at Cakaudrove. He has been an acceptable local preacher for some years, and is, in intelligence, far beyond most of his generation."

Who was Joel Bulu? A native converted under the preaching of an English missionary in 1834. He was for many years an able, faithful, untiring preacher of the gospel to his countrymen. Thus the gospel, when it is introduced, propagates itself. Mr. Turner, an English Wesleyan missionary, preached, and Joel Bulu was converted; Bulu preached, and the Viceroy, Henry Maafu, was converted; Maafu preached earnestly and ruled his people well. And the good work is now going on. The church in Fiji is firmly established. There is a Wesleyan Conference there as thoroughly organized as here in middle Tennessee. And it is a very zealous missionary church. Is it better for the world that Fiji should be a civilized, Christianized dependency of the British crown than the Fiji of fifty years ago—a land of foul idolatries, of horrid orgies, of cannibal feasts, and of all uncleanness? The missionaries, preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, have made the difference. And in less than fifty years!

Though our church has no mission in Japan, we must be interested in whatever efforts others are making to bring the people of this remarkable kingdom to the knowledge of the truth. The cause is one, and we may rejoice in the labors of others, although we have not counted ourselves worthy to share in their rewards.

The Missionary Herald (organ of the American Board) for April gives us some interesting statements respecting Japan and the mission work that is being attempted there. I make some extracts:

"Japan occupies a wide place in the thoughts and sympathies of American Christians. This is largely owing, doubtless, to the fact that the wall of separation, which for centuries had virtually excluded it from the rest of the world, was thrown down twenty years ago by the energetic yet peaceful measures of our countrymen. When and by whom Japan was discovered it is difficult to say; but that it has been more fully uncovered, and brought into the family of nations, is due to American pluck and diplomacy.

"The principal islands of Japan are four in number—Niphon, Yesso, Lhikoku and Kinshin. The first is twice the size of New York, and the fourth twice the size of Massachusetts. The territory of the whole empire, embracing 150,000 square miles, is considerably less than the area of California. It is divided into 84 provinces, and 717 districts or counties." Kole is a city on the northern shore of the beautiful "Inland Sea." It contains about 40,000 inhabitants. Here in the spring of 1870 the American Board commenced its work among the Japanese. "Kole has one of the best harbors in Japan, and this fact has made it a center of great commercial activity. One thousand foreign vessels visit this harbor every year. The importations amount in value to $7,000,000 annually. The principal export is tea." Representatives of the Presbyterian and Reformed (Dutch) Churches went to Japan about fifteen years ago, and a little later two men were sent out by the American Episcopal Church. Very little progress was made till 1868, when the dual government came to an end, and the Mikado became sole ruler. Marvelous changes have taken place during the last six years. The eagerness of the people to learn English and to master the methods of Western civilization is astonishing. For instance, the Herald says: "Some who were numbered among the nobility ten years ago are willing to enter the service of foreigners for the opportunity it will give them to learn English. We are told that an enterprising Japanese in Yeddo is about to start an English newspaper. If all in that vicinity, who can read such a paper, shall subscribe for it, its success will at once be assured." The following brief statement of the mission work in Japan will be interesting to those who are interested in missions at all. There are twelve societies—English and American—at work in Japan. One hundred missionaries, including ladies, are engaged in Yeddo, Yokohama, Kole, Osaka (recently made a mission station,) Nangasaki and Hakodadi. In five of these cities churches have been formed, the membership being about two hundred. Portions of the Bible have been translated and are being circulated. Mission schools are established and are doing well. Hospitals and dispensaries are important adjuncts. What revolutions may twenty years bring to the enterprising people of these fair and fertile islands!

I close this article with some statements of what two of our sister churches in the South are doing in the foreign mission fields. The Southern Presbyterian Church, through its official journal, the Missionary, makes the following showing:

At another time I will give a brief statement of the mission fields and mission forces of our own church. At this time it may be considered profitably that there is a great cry for re-enforcements, and the men are ready to go. O that those who intend "some day" to do good with their money would do it now! The following incidents from the Monthly Record, Church of Scotland, are worth remembering:

"A friend said to me that a good man he named had died and left £30,000.

"I held up my hands and said: 'What a pity!'

"He looked surprised and said: 'What do you mean?'

"'I mean just what I say,' I replied: 'for surely it is a pity, when the man might have sent it on before him, that he should have left his £30,000 behind him, for he will very likely never hear of it again.'"

"Duncan Matheson once said: 'If —— were ever getting back to this world for half a day, the first thing I believe she would do would be to break her will.'"

I suspect there are not a few dead Christians who, if they got a chance to return to earth, would do the same.

ENOUGH.

BY FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

I am so weak, dear Lord! I cannot stand
One moment without Thee;
But oh! the tenderness of Thine enfolding,
And oh! the faithfulness of Thine upholding,
And Thy right hand!
That strength is enough for me.

I am so lonely, Lord! And yet I know
All fullness dwells in Thee;
And hour by hour that never failing treasure
Supplies and fills in overflowing measure
My last, my greatest need; and so
Thy grace is enough for me.

It is so sweet to trust Thy word alone;
I do not ask to see
The unveiling of Thy purpose, or the shining
Of future light on mysteries untwining;
Thy promise roll is all my own—
Thy word is enough for me.

The human heart asks love; but now I know
That my heart hath from thee
All real and full and marvelous perfection,
So near, so human! Yet divine affection
Thrills gloriously the mighty glow!
Thy love is enough for me.

There were strange soul-depths, restless, vast and broad,
Unfathomed as the sea,
And infinite craving for some infinite stilling;
But now Thy perfect peace is perfect filling;
Lord Jesus Christ, my Lord, my God!
Thou, thou art enough for me.

Freedom, Law and Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: I have waited patiently, hoping that some brother who advocates the Calvinistic theory of created holiness would attempt to answer my first proposition; but not one has even mentioned it, and until that is answered my position stands firm. I will restate it: "That God cannot, in the nature and relation of things, create moral holiness or sin." Equilibrium is the utmost limit in the organization of a moral agent; for that which is more than straight must be crooked, and more than equal must be unequal. "God declares his ways are equal." The church in the dark ages taught that the sun ran round the world, and that their geography and religion must agree; and if their geography was proven to be false their religion would be false also. But the earth runs round the sun, and God and heaven and salvation are unchanged. The mistake on created holiness, as with many other doctrines, is traceable to a misunderstood humanity. God formed man, as to his body, in union and harmony with the natural world which he had created; but his life, health and death were all dependent on his strictly maintaining the physical laws under which he was placed. Pain and death were possible conditions of his very nature; not curses, but designed by God to keep the body intact. The soul of man is not in a very important sense a creation, nor is it, like the body, a formation or relation. If a creation, then the Creator is certainly responsible for its success or failure. If a relation, then the soul is the creature of circumstances, influenced by the strongest motives, and at last only a motive. The soul of man, with all its attributes, is an emanation from God. "Let us make man" in our image and likeness. The last analysis of the origin of sin and holiness is found in the constitutional nature of man itself. If Adam was created holy, how could he sin? If the tree is holy the fruit is holy. It may be argued that Adam became unholy in nature before he sinned; but by what law did he become unholy before he sinned? If he became proud or rebellious in heart, did not those buds come from his holy heart? There was nowhere else for them to originate. The devil tempted him; but if the bud and fruit of sin were the devil's, then they grew from the devil's tree, and not from Adam's, and the woman and the devil were the sinners. If Adam was created holy, then a holy tree did bring unholy fruit, or Adam was made a sinner before he sinned.

The Calvinists say that, when professors sin, they never were holy. On this hypothesis, how about Adam? But who tempted the devil when he was an angel of light? There are but two possible ways in which sinners or devils can be made—either God must make them (which is blasphemy,) or they must make themselves, and from themselves. Every man who thinks at all knows that he sins from himself. The fermenting principle in a grape is not a foreign element, but a part of the grape, and the grape would not be a grape without it. The wine-makers could never separate the dregs from the wine but for the fermenting principle in the grape. Without the knowledge of sin and the power to commit it there could not be either sin or holiness. Man is now, by the atonement and the aid of the Spirit, as free as Adam was in paradise, and in a much more hopeful condition, for Adam could sin but once—one offense to condemnation. But the free gift is of many offenses unto justification. The image and likeness of God, as manifested in humanity, stands alone, separate and distinct from all sin and holiness, and proof against all tempters. He may act with motives or against motives, or without motives—stand back of all relations. There is no motive that lies back of ——— 5 00 @ 7 00 @ 10 00 @ 14 00 can compel him to ——— evil. Holiness and sin find their last analysis in freedom. The Lord offers man reasons to be holy, and the devil motives to sin; but neither can compel. God placed before Adam life and death in the tree of the knowledge of good and evil; he chose the evil and "was not deceived." Joshua called on the posterity of Adam to choose between God and idolatry. The whole problem of sin and holiness must have their foundation in freedom and law. God himself works under law, and there is not one holiness for God and another for man, who is the image of God. The God who commands me to be just, is he unjust? The old Calvinist theory that man can only act religiously as he is acted upon, and therefore don't act at all, and at the same time has the God-given power to sin, is so foolish that I will not notice it. St. Augustine taught that Adam was placed under law, but his posterity under grace. Adam was under law without grace, and his posterity under the same law with grace. How can a man be under grace who is not under law? How can grace be exercised where there is no sin, and how can men sin without law? "Do we make void the law through faith?" God forbid. Adam was placed under the eternal law of good and evil, and he had the capacity of knowing and doing good or evil. Holiness was certainly the divine purpose when he gave to Adam his image and likeness. But God himself could not leave him a man and keep him from sin, nor could all the fallen angels have forced him to sin if he but chose the one and refused the other. If God could make a man holy he could certainly keep him from sin; and if he could his would have kept Cain from killing his brother. He would have saved Jerusalem if he could; but he could not, because they would not. If the Christian world would only abandon the unscriptural dogmas of imputed sin and imputed holiness—or, which is the same, created sin and created holiness—then we might teach men the true gospel. The doctrines of imputed sin and holiness were never preached until the days of Augustine. They are not the doctrines of Christ, but of the dark ages. Holiness is compared to a robe, which the righteous had washed in the blood of the Lamb—their robes, not Christ's robe. If holiness is a creation, to what end is the law and the atonement, and all the means of grace? If God can create holiness, why are not all men holy? If he could make one man holy without the law, and without his will or consent, then he can make all men holy. The whole Bible is one continuous exhortation to man to be holy. That is the object of the Bible, and the end of all the doctrines of salvation. "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

Obituaries.

MEMOIR OF THE HON. STEPHEN H. JOHNSON.

The Christian example of Judge JOHNSON ought to be known and preserved for the benefit of the church. Such is the opinion of those who knew him best, and who have requested the writer to give a sketch of his religious character through a long life. Of his early manhood we know but little, except that he was born in Virginia, April 23, 1792, received a liberal education, and was eminently possessed of those refined and noble characteristics which were the common attributes of an old-style Virginia gentleman. The writer first knew him in the capacity of a school teacher, in the vicinity of Port Gibson, about fifty years ago, during which time he obtained saving faith in Christ and became a member of the church. February 7, 1828, he was happily married to Mrs. Sarah Brown, of Claiborne county, Miss., a pious young widow, with several little children by her first marriage, to whom he made one of the most affectionate and provident stepfathers we have known. Soon after his marriage he moved to Copiah county, then a comparative wilderness, where, as an agriculturist, lawyer and judicial officer, he spent the remainder of his long and eventful life, filling, at different times, many positions of honor and trust. Among his fellow-citizens his unbending integrity and superior intellectual endowments gave him a front rank, which he always maintained with credit to himself and usefulness to his country. His Christian character was finely modeled. Religion with him was an all-important and glorious reality, and was intimately interwoven with his daily life. All the usual forms of private and domestic worship were strictly observed. In the church his light was never hidden. At different times he was class-leader, steward, trustee and secretary of the Quarterly Conferences. But while he was a conscientious Methodist, and willing to be known as such everywhere, he was truly a lover of all good men, and rejoiced in the prosperity of all evangelical churches.

Judge Johnson earnestly sought for the legitimate interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, and was one of the best biblical critics we have ever found among the laymen of any church. Judge Johnson would yield to nothing, either at home or abroad, which he considered anti-Methodistic; but, while he adhered so rigidly to his church principles, there was a suavity in his manners, and such a vein of good humor running through all his social intercourse, as made him a general favorite with all classes of good society. His social qualities were superior to those of most men. He excelled in unstudied repartee, refined wit, and possessed a large fund of amusing and illustrative anecdotes, which he had treasured up from reading and observation, and which, with his fine conversational powers, he often rehearsed to the great delight of his associates. To say that his house was always the welcome home of the itinerant preachers would be altogether too tame and commonplace to express that bountiful, free and home-like hospitality which they so often enjoyed there. Though a man of superior culture himself, he was very kind and condescending to the most uncultivated licentiate in the ministry while he had confidence in his sincerity. He believed in a divine call to the office and work of the ministry, and he had seen so many of those unfledged licentiates grow up in a few years to be able and useful preachers that he was ever ready to counsel and encourage them to perseverance under difficulties. Whether it was natural with him, or acquired by his early profession as a school teacher, or was the spontaneous outburst of his benevolent Christian heart, we need not undertake to decide, but he had a life-time fondness for little children and young people generally, and nothing seemed to add more to his domestic and social pleasure than to see them in the full tide of childish and youthful enjoyment, provided they were properly restricted by the principles of our holy Christianity. As a matter of course, he was a general favorite among the juniors of society. Some old people become repulsive to the young, but this was not the case with Judge Johnson. His kind words of recognition, his attractive wit and humor, with his smiling face, drew them to his companionship to the last day of his active life.

One of the peculiar afflictions, not to say penalties, of extreme old age is the disbandment of our families by death and otherwise. Judge Johnson had lived to see a large part of his immediate family, including his aged and saintly wife, laid in the silent tomb, while the other members of his family had acquired homes of their own, until he was left alone on his plantation near Hazlehurst. He was deeply impressed with the belief that the time of his departure was near at hand, and with his usual calmness and precision settled up all his secular business, wrote his will and prepared for the event. Believing that he needed more protection in the feebleness of old age than he had on his plantation, he fitted up a room at a hotel in Hazlehurst, where he remained until death, most carefully cared for by his stepdaughter, Mrs. B. K. Hawkins, and her family. Some time in January he was attacked with pneumonia, and after an example of the most patient suffering, full of peace and holy hope, he ceased to breathe on Friday night, January 22, 1875, aged eighty-three years. His cough was so violent that he was able to converse only in broken sentences during his illness, but what he said exhibited the most perfect resignation to the will of God, and a full assurance of a better life. His morning prayer before his death was: "Dear Lord, if it be thy precious will, take me home this day."

J. G. JONES.

DIED, at her residence in Fayette, Miss., March 1, 1875, Mrs. PHILADELPHIA SHACKELFORD, aged nearly eighty-four years.

She was born May 30, 1791, in the village of Uniontown, on Coles' creek, in that part of Mississippi within the limits of Jefferson county. She was one of several children born unto William and Pauline Ferguson, who were of Scotch descent, if not nativity. July 4, 1811, Philadelphia Ferguson was married to Edmund Shackelford, a native of Virginia, but then a near neighbor of the Fergusons family. After about twenty-two years had passed, and nine children (eight sons and one daughter) had been born, Edmund Shackelford died, leaving his widow to maintain and educate those of the children who survived him. She was equal to the task. With patience, energy and industry rarely equaled and seldom surpassed, she toiled early and late, hopefully and, above all, successfully. The greater part of the estate of her husband was swept away to satisfy the extortionate demands of a creditor. But little more than a small farm inherited from her parents remained to her out of the abundance she had possessed in the life-time of her husband. But it mattered not. Trustfully and cheerfully she accepted her altered condition and labored to educate her children. And tho duly was well done. Their gratitude and filial affection rewarded her cares and smoothed the pathway of her later years. Two of her children still live—one, the Hon. Thomas Shackelford, of Canton, Miss., late chief justice of the Supreme Court of this State, himself a venerable man beyond threescore years of age; the other, the Hon. George W. Shackelford, of Fayette, for many years judge of the Probate Court of Jefferson county.

About the year 1840 Mrs. Shackelford became a member of the Methodist Church. She joined the church under the ministration of that great and good man, the Rev. B. M. Drake, at Union chapel, in Jefferson county, a few miles from the spot where she was born. She had delayed taking the step for many years, for reasons that were satisfactory to herself, and which no doubt were valid. It made no visible change in her mode of life. It was but the public profession of the faith that had so long sustained her, and enabled her to bear the sorrows, the cares and adversities which had befallen her. She thereby simply confessed before men the Savior she had loved and adored nearly a half century. The step was taken with the quiet dignity so peculiarly her own. Her nature was not demonstrative, and religion never moved her to shout. It was a messenger that brought peace to her soul, while it brought joy to her heart. She loved God because he was good, and she worshiped him "in spirit and in truth."

The writer of this tribute knew and loved her well. An inmate of her home for more than a year, he learned to venerate her character and to regard her as a second mother. She was worthy of all honor. Denied many of the advantages now possessed by the young, and permitted only to obtain the meager schooling afforded in the log school-house of the wilderness, and that in the troublous times of Spanish domination and the change of governments, whose vicissitudes we cannot now appreciate, she, by her perseverance and continued study, stored her mind with treasures of knowledge, and made herself that agreeable companion whom old and young admired and respected. Fearless, she ever upheld the right and turned from the wrong. Herself the embodiment of true nobility of character, she had an utter contempt for all that was mean and ignoble. Humane, her hand was ever open to supply the wants of the needy, and her ear was never deaf to the cry of the distressed. Aged, she yet sympathized with youth, and the young never grew weary of her society. But time and space forbid an extended notice of the admirable qualities of her mind and heart, and we can only sum them up and say that she possessed all those things which adorn old age and make it attractive. Her life illustrated the beauties of faith, hope and charity.

One who knew her intimately writes: "Our venerable friend was a remarkable woman—her very faults were heroic." Another, who stood by and beheld the closing scene, says: "Her step was firm to within a few weeks, and her mind was clear to within a few days of her death. She seemed to be impressed with the belief, three weeks before she died, that she should never get well, although her physician could discover no disease other than a giving way of the whole system. Her death was a quiet sleep, without a struggle." Another says: "O that I were as well prepared to meet my God!"

She was perhaps the oldest native of Mississippi. Having outlived by many years the village in which she was born, and nearly two entire generations, she passed away loved and mourned by all who knew her. Full of years and ready to go, she was gathered unto the saints in glory and entered into rest eternal.

M.

DIED, at Hollow Square, Hale county, Ala., January 26, 1875, Mrs. ELMA MELTON, wife of Mr. Eugene Melton, in the twenty-third year of her age.

No eulogy is necessary to commemorate the virtues of her to whose memory is dedicated this last sad tribute of affection. A firm and steadfast friend, a kind and dutiful daughter, a fond and loving wife, is no more. Possessed of all those gentle, winsome, suasive traits which constitute the crowning graces of a noble woman, and weave around the heart silken cords of love stronger than triple brass, she was alike the favorite of her friends and the idol of her family. Guileless and unsuspecting as a child, yet pure as a vestal virgin, meek and gentle as the timid fawn, yet frank and open as truth itself, she added to physical attractions of the first order a mind highly cultivated in every department, a voice touchingly sweet, and a heart responsive to every emotion of sympathy and vibrating to every touch of affection. Though still within the portals of youth, her short life had been checkered with sorrow. Bereavements, trials, misfortunes, all had been hers. Yet, amid happiness and sorrow, she had ever been the same kind, gentle spirit, adding brightness to prosperity, and alleviating adversity by the gladsome sunshine of her genial presence. A consistent member of the Methodist Church, she brought to bear upon the vicissitudes of life that Christian humility and resignation which is only born of a pure spirit consecrated to the will of God. Not strange is it, then, when the dark angel hovered around her bedside, moistening her fair brow with the chilling dews of death, that the victim was ready at the appointed hour. Looking around on the sorrowing family with that calm resignation which can only spring of a bright hope of immortality beyond the grave, and beckoning to her bedside the weeping husband that he might imprint a last fond kiss on her immaculate cheek, she raised her soft eyes in mute adoration toward the far-off abode of the blessed, and while a gentle smile lighted up her fair features her angel spirit took its last long flight across the "dark valley of the shadow of death," over to that bright, shining shore beyond. Wrapped in the spotless folds of her bridal robe:

"Death lay on her like an untimely frost
Upon the fairest flower of all the field."

D. A.

SOLOMON WARD was born in Beaufort, N. C., September 10, 1810. In the prime of manhood he moved to Alabama and settled in Greene county (now Hale.) There he was happily married to Miss Ann Maria Hall, who lives to mourn his loss. In 1857 he moved to Sumter county, same State, where he resided until his death, November 7, 1871.

We mourn to chronicle the death of this excellent brother. In him were blended those virtues which make the genuine man. Dissimulation was no part of his being. His lips never falsified his heart—clear as the sunlight in all his transactions. His ideals of moral obligations were lofty and scriptural, and they ruled him. In soundness and storm he held to his integrity. He was a staunch citizen, a good neighbor, a loving husband, a kind and tender father, and generous and noble in all his impulses. His heart could rejoice with the rejoicing and weep with the weeping. He was always ready and willing to do his part in every good thing. For about thirty-six years he was a blameless member of the Methodist Church. His great diffidence prevented him from engaging prominently in the more public exercises of the church. He always thought others could do better than himself. Bro. Ward was not theoretical but experimental in his religion. He understood and felt the import of the apostolic language: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," and "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."

For months before his death, at times, he had slight attacks of vertigo. His last illness was brief. No one at first apprehended serious results. I visited him a week or ten days before he died. He then expressed impressions that his "sickness was unto death," and gave assurance that death had no terrors for him. His testimony to the last was clear and satisfactory. While life's current was fast ebbing a brother attending asked him if he was afraid to die. He replied: "I am not." "Do you find the love of God in your heart?" His response was: "I do. Glory to God!" Friends and loved ones then bowed in prayer around his bed. Prayer ended, his spirit, on angels' wings, fled to that land where no death is.

"I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

C. B. DUBOSE.

THOMAS JEFFERSON GIBSON, son of David and Frances Gibson, was born in Washington county, Miss., May 12, 1807. He departed this life at ten minutes to twelve P. M., March 23, 1875, after an illness of nineteen days of remarkable suffering, which he bore patiently. Bro. Gibson had been a great sufferer for about thirty years, being subject to epileptic fits, which confined him more or less to his home.

I learned from one who was acquainted with him, whose words I give, that "he joined the church in 1830, and was a consistent member for several years. In 1871 he attached himself to the church again, during the time of Bro. F. M. Featherstun's ministry on South Warren circuit. He always expressed himself as being fully prepared for another world, and always said he had no fears of death, but that it would be a great comfort to him, and that his afflictions here would work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory at the right hand of God. On his sick-bed he said all was well with him, and that all appeared beautiful and bright before him. I sang several songs for him, one of which was his favorite:

"What is this that steals upon my frame?
Is it death? Is it death?"

"He died at his post, receiving the welcome plaudit: 'Well done.' During the time of singing he was perfectly calm and composed. A pleasant smile shone upon his face, which bespoke a happiness of soul, or 'peace that passeth all understanding,' and he tried to assist me in singing. He was a kind husband and a devoted father. None knew him but to like him."

J. W. ELLISON, P. C.

MRS. MARTHA E. MILLER, the subject of the following obituary, was born October 6, 1848, and departed this life November 14, 1874, at her father's residence in Wilkinson county, Miss. She married, when quite young, a Mr. Miller, of Woodville, with whom she lived till her family grew to be five in number. Being attacked with pulmonary consumption, she suffered much, but failed not to turn to him who says: "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the fall of 1870, and we can testify that her fruits were those of a humble, consistent and earnest Christian. Her trials of faith and afflictions of body and mind were frequent and severe, but out of all she came forth "more than conqueror." A few days before she passed away from earthly afflictions to her home in heaven she expressed a desire to take the sacrament, and to see me, and hear us talk of the Savior and his religion and pray. We administered the sacrament to her and the family, at which time she said: "My Lord sustains me now. Though I have nothing whereof to boast or glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, he loves me and sustains me now." She then called her children to her bedside and gave them to the Lord, shaking their hands and kissing their ruby lips, saying: "Farewell, farewell. Father and mother, brothers and sisters, meet me in heaven."

WILLIAM FINN.

W. S. PORTER was born June 19, 1808, in Buncombe county, N. C., and died, just as the sun was setting, December 31, 1874, at Davisville, Calhoun county, Ala.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1843. He made a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus some years before he joined our church. He also belonged to the Masonic order, and was buried accordingly. He filled every office in the lodge, perhaps, from the master down, and in the church he occupied her offices from steward down. In all he magnified his office, and sought faithfully to promote the cause of religion. He was a warm and zealous Christian, and was prompt in attendance at church as long as he was able to go. His prayers were full of unction, and generally the "amen" was a hallelujah to God for the witness of the Spirit and for heartfelt religion. He was afflicted for months, but he suffered patiently and meekly. His end was peace.

DIED, on the twenty-second of March, 1875, Mrs. ELIZABETH ANN TERRY, of Franklin county, Miss., aged sixty-one years and five months. Her maiden name was Tillery. She was married to Mr. Grilling Claughton in 1829, with whom she lived happily till he was removed by death, which event occurred in 1864. She lived a widow till October 8, 1874, when she was married to Mr. Terry, who survives her. She was a pious woman, and died in peace.

THE editor of the Southern Churchman is incorrigible on the tobacco question. One of his contributors has been hard on him, and thus he replies, balmy and bland as the purest Principe:

"He used strong language—stronger than any tobacco we ever used. If the editor had not been a user of the weed he would not have let the 'tobacco' article in; but as he knew it was not true, all the other users knew it was not true, and all other readers of the Southern Churchman knew it was not true, we did not see why our correspondent could not abuse us a little. We doubt not it did him good. And why should not a poor fellow who can't smoke have some pleasure in the world."

A MAN who was praying said: "O Lord, give us neither poverty nor riches;" and, pausing solemnly a moment, he added, "especially poverty." We fear most persons make this qualification, mentally at least.

THE CHILD AND THE SEA.

BY MARY MAPES DODGE.

One summer day, when birds flew high,
I saw a child step into the sea;
It glowed and sparkled at her touch,
And softly plashed about her knee.

It held her lightly with its strength,
It kissed and kissed her silken hair,
It heaved with tenderness to know
A little child was in its care.

She, gleeful, dipped her pretty arms
And caught the sparkles in her hands;
I heard her laughter as she soon
Came skipping up the sunny sands.

"Is this the cruel sea?" I thought,
"The merciless, the awful sea?"
Now hear the answer, soft and true,
That rippled over the beach to me;

"Shall not the sea, in the sun, be glad
When a child doth come to play?
Had it been the storm-time, what could I,
The sea, but bear her away—
Bear her away on my foaming crest,
Toss her and hurry her to her rest!

"So I live or death, God willeth me;
And he loveth every soul;
I've an earthly shore and a heavenly shore,
And toward them both I roll;
Shining and beautiful both are they,
And a little child will go God's way."

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 8.

CONCERNING MOLES.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: We promised to listen to-night to what Tom has to say about moles, and, if I am not mistaken, about some other animals; but since the new teacher canje you have had so many lessons to study that our evening chats will have to be shortened; and I expect, as Tom looks very wise to-night, it will take all the evening to tell us what he knows about moles alone. What have you to say, Master Tom?

"Moles," says Tom, "are properly called Talpidæ, and are of the order Insectivera, which forms an intermediate group between the Cheiroptera and the Carnivora. They are pre-eminently subterranean and—"

"Please, grandpa," says Harry, "you tell us about them. Tom uses such big words."

"We must know what they are first," says Tom.

Certainly we must; but suppose we let Charlie tell us. Charlie, what are moles?

"Little rats," says Charlie.

Not exactly, my boy. Suppose you try again.

"Little mice," says Charlie.

Tom is disgusted. What is the matter with our zoologist?

"Why," says Tom, "they don't even belong to the same order. Rats and mice are Rodents."

Why called Rodents, Tom?

"Because they gnaw," says Tom. "But moles are called Insectivora because they eat insects."

Well, this is a pretty good start. Now go ahead, Tom, and tell us what you know about them.

"That is all I know, grandpa, except that they dig holes in the ground in which they live, and that men make hats out of their skins."

Can moles see, Tom?

"No, no; they can't see because they have no eyes," the children all cry out; but Tom shakes his head.

"Yes they have," he says, "and quite keen ones; but they are so small and so covered up with hair that you can't see them unless you examine very closely."

Can you tell me, Tom, why the eyes are so small and so well protected?

"Because they were made so, grandpa, I suppose."

Yes, but why were they made so? Shall I tell you? It is because the mole has but little use for eyes, as it lives under the ground most of the time, and its eyes are set way back in its head and covered with hair to keep the dirt out of them when it is digging with its shovel-shaped hands. There are rats in the Mammoth Cave that have no use of their eyes, because they live in the dark most of the time, and yet if caught and left for a few days in the light they can see; but the fish in the cave have no eyes at all, because they never come into the light. Tom is right about moles not being at all like mice except to the careless eye. Indeed its breast bone is more like that of a bird, which projects in birds to give room for the very large muscles used in flight, and in moles for the no less powerful muscles they need to dig into the hard ground. Remember that the all-wise God has given to each creature just what it needs, and no more—nothing is wasted. The mole needs just a little sight to depend upon when it comes out of its little house under the ground, and it has two eyes no larger than mustard seed; but its sense of smell is very acute. I have often examined its little house, which is constructed with great skill about a foot under the ground, and sometimes extends for rods, making a sort of underground road for the little creatures to run along, and they can move much faster along this road than above ground. Some people think they do a great deal of harm by their mining operations, but I am inclined to think they do much more good than harm.

"How so, grandpa?"

By keeping the ground loose, and by the destruction of so many hurtful insects on which they feed. I have never found any little creature yet that, when you come to learn all about its habits, does not seem to have a place of its own and a part to perform in the great work of running the world. If I only had time to-night I should like to tell you about some very beautiful moles I have seen, called "golden moles," and another kind called "silver moles," and yet another kind called "star-nosed moles;" but the names themselves give you a good idea of them, and I need only say that the golden moles are quite yellow, and are found in Africa. The silver moles are not quite as bright as silver, but look somewhat like it, and these have white feet and tails. The star-nosed mole has a star on the end of its nose, composed of fleshy filaments, which the mole can move as it pleases, and which serve as delicate organs of touch. These last two kinds are found in this country. They are all pretty little creatures, I assure you. How would you like to have some of them, Harry, to keep with your white mice?

"Very much, grandpa."

I have seen mice that I think better worth keeping than those you have. I saw a mouse once that could sing as well as any Canary bird you ever saw.

"What, grandpa, mice sing?"

Yes, indeed; but I cannot tell you about them to-night, for it is bed-time. So good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Young Friends.

WETUMPKA, ALA., April 22, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: I reckon you think we little folks are great pests; but, Mr. Editor, I do love the ADVOCATE, especially the Child's Corner. It is a great friend in our family. I love for Saturday to come, so I can gain some new ideas. But what makes Grandpa Goodale keep us in suspense so long? I am so anxious to learn "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest." Who ever heard of such a thing—"Barney Milked the Boys' Nest!" I do wish Tom would bite his lips when grandpa is talking. Ma says it is for our good that it is put off—says it will cause our minds to expand. But I differ with her; it cramps mine, I think. I will try to be patient, for ma tells us that patience worketh miracles, and I think Barney wrought a miracle when he milked the boys' nest.

Your little friend,

MANIE WHETSTONE.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, March 23, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl just eleven years old. I do not know what I would do if it was not for the ADVOCATE to read every week. I read the Child's Corner. I like to read it very much; there are so many pretty stories in it. We thank you very much for the tickets you sent our Sunday school. We have had more scholars to join our Sunday school since. Mr. Tom Moore is the name of our superintendent. I like him very much. We have preaching at the Methodist church once in a month. Our preacher is Mr. Pipes. I like to hear him preach very much. So good-by.

Your friend,

MARY LOU. CHAPMAN.

BE EXACT.—I have seen very serious mischief done through some one's want of care in answering questions. But instead of mentioning serious cases we will take a small one. Suppose a father is going to take two of his children out for a ramble. They are to start by a train at a certain minute, and they are going to botanize at a place where they will be glad to have brought some refreshments with them. The father is working till within a short time of the start. All in good time he tells Bob to ask Jessy to pack the sandwiches, the cake and the coffee in a certain satchel that they well know. "Tell her at once," says he, and Bob does. Within a short time of the hour for starting the father says to Bob: "Has Jessy made up the satchel?" and giddy Bob answers: "Oh, yes." But at the last moment it is found that Jessy has not packed the satchel; the train is missed, and the little holiday has to be put off. What Bob meant to say was that, he having told Jessy to pack the satchel, he took it for granted she had done so.

Now that is not only a little case; it is purely imaginary. Yet things of the kind happen every day, and some of them are very awkward.—Good Words for the Young.

"THAT'S HOW!"—After a great snow-storm a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you intend to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy cheerfully; "that's how!"

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it.—Do not keep thinking how large or hard it is, but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller and smaller until it is done.

A LAZY FELLOW once declared in a public company that he could not find bread for his family. "Nor I," replied an industrious man; "I am obliged to work for it."

BEMO'S GRAVE.

BY RACHEL G. ALSOP.

Near a stream in Cherry valley,
By the Kittatinny's side,
While the purple light was resting
On the mountain, Bemo died.

As the golden glow of sunset
Faded from the twilight sky,
So the light of life, once joyous,
Left his half shut, glazing eye.

No more at morn his loud bark's echo
Up our mountain gorge will ring,
Nor his graceful ears at evening
Droop above the crystal spring.

No harsh voice e'er made him tremble,
No strong arm e'er dealt a blow,
And beneath these mountain laurels
Gentle hands have laid him low.

On a knoll in Cherry valley,
'Neath the rhododendron's shade,
Where the hemlock makes sad music,
Is our dear old Bemo laid.

After months of snow and sunshine,
On his grave have mosses grown;
And three little girls, as happy,
Playing in the grove, have come.

All at once they stop to listen
To the story, old and true,
Of the good, brave dog here buried,
And of all he used to do.

How he played "Bo-peep" with David
When he was a little boy;
How he shook the sticks he gave him,
Capered round and barked for joy.

How he kept the robbers from us
Nine long years—till he was old;
Always heard our lowest whisper,
Always did as he was told!

And when he grew old and sickly,
Wandered far away to die,
By the brook in Glenwood meadow,
Where the rushes grow so high.

One bright morning when the sunlight
Tipped the little waves with gold,
There the boys found dear old Bemo,
On the coarse grass, stiff and cold!

Then the little girls who heard this
Went and gathered meadow flowers
For the grave of old black Bemo,
Good and faithful dog of ours.

New York Observer.

Bethlehem and the Moravians.

BY NORMAN FOX.

But three hours' ride from New York, in the beautiful valley of the Lehigh, lies the quaint old Moravian town of Bethlehem.

An interesting history is that of the Moravian Church and of this town. The sect came into being among the followers of Huss, more than half a century before Luther's protest. The "apostolic succession" of its episcopate came through some Waldensian bishop consecrated at the Roman Catholic Council of Basle, and has been recognized as valid by the Parliament of Great Britain. Crushed with the other Protestant bodies of Bohemia in the Thirty Years' war, and lying prostrate for a century, the church was reorganized in Germany in 1722, under the patronage of the pious Count Zinzendorf. Wesley passed some time with this people, and introduced some of their usages into his own church. The zeal for foreign missions which has made the name of the Moravians famous among God's people led them, in 1741, to establish an Indian mission on the Lehigh. It was founded at Christmas, and they gave it the name of Bethlehem. Settlers came to it in large numbers from the old country, and it became the headquarters of the church in America. The settlement suffered much during the old Indian wars, lying, as it were, between two fires, the Indians being jealous of all whites, and the whites suspicious of men who sought the souls of redskins, instead of their scalps. And there were stirring scenes here during the Revolution. The large church structures were used as hospitals, and great numbers of the Continental soldiers lie buried in the suburban fields. Here the wounded Lafayette received the tender care of the Moravian sisters, and another interesting local incident is recalled by Longfellow's "Hymn of the Moravian Nuns at the Consecration of Pulaski's Banner."

The town has several railroads now, has large manufactories, has a new college—the Lehigh University, to which Asa Packer has given over half a million; has elegant modern mansions on its broad, well-shaded avenues, and it claims to have grown to a population of eight or ten thousand, but it still retains the charming quaintness of the olden time. Four-fifths of the names on the street signs show the German descent of the people; the merchant and the physician must still be able to speak "Pennsylvania Dutch;" political gatherings must have German oratory, and church services will be in German part of the day. The prevailing domestic architecture is still of the "old revolutionary" pattern. Still flourishes the old Sun Hotel, where have lodged Adams and Hancock, Gates and Greene, Lafayette and Pulaski, Corn Planter and Red Jacket, Lady Washington, and many others of the celebrities of by-gone days. And the large ancient church, plain but remarkably bright and cheerful, the widows' houses, the venerable seminary building and other such structures attract the attention of the most careless tourist.

The ancient grave-yard is an interesting spot. The graves are in long rows, a little square memorial stone lying flat on each, and all are alike—human pride nowhere seeking to escape the great leveling of death. Far back in the last century are the dates of the decease of some of the "rude forefathers of the hamlet," and the missionary origin of the town is seen in such inscriptions as "Samuel, a Delaware boy, died 1746;" "Jonas, a Mohican;" "Otapawamamud, a Wampano;" and "Chitemoqua, the first convert from the Shawanese."

The venerable but still flourishing female seminary here has a large army of alumni. The Bethlehem Seminary Souvenir, a volume of five hundred pages, will be read with interest by every student of American history. The Moravians have always had an educational as well as a missionary zeal. Their schools are among the oldest in this country. The Bethlehem Female Seminary, and the Boys' School at Nazareth, a few miles distant, were founded in 1785; their Female Seminary at Lititz, Pa., in 1794; their Female Academy at Salem, N. C., in 1802; and the Moravian College and Theological Seminary at Bethlehem in 1807. At all their mission stations day schools as well as Sunday schools are formed. In Jamaica alone over three thousand children are educated in the mission schools. It is hardly necessary to say that the large congregation at Bethlehem has the look of intelligence.

On Sunday, and especially on festival days, the German love of music shows itself in the Moravian church services. The congregational singing—fervent and hearty—consists of old German chorals. The church at Bethlehem has a large and sweet-toned organ, which on special occasions is accompanied by an orchestra of violins and trombones. The choir singing can hardly be equaled in our wealthiest congregations. When a member of the church dies the band of trombonists take their position in the church tower and by appropriate music announce the passing of the soul. At the grave also the trombones play the requiem. In the olden time, when the first field of grain of the season was cut the reapers went forth in procession, the trombones playing joyous music. Strains of glad melody greet the Christmas time. On New Year eve there is a "watch meeting," and as the clock strikes twelve the organ and trombones announce in loudest notes the advent of the new year. And at sunrise on Easter morning the congregation, preceded by a corps of trombonists and singers, moves in solemn procession to the burial ground, and there in sacred worship they celebrate the resurrection of our Lord.

The German love of children shows itself in the Moravian church services. One day of the year is set apart for the children's festival. A school girl's diary of the last century says of one observance of this day: "Early in the morning we were awakened by the sound of the guitar, accompanied by singing. At six the trombonists from the balcony of the Brethren's house proclaimed our festival. At seven we assembled for morning prayer. All of us were draped in white, with pink ribbons in our caps. At nine we met in the children's meeting. After this we led the procession to the meeting-house. At twelve we had an excellent dinner. At two o'clock the trombones summoned us to love-feast, which was opened with the hymn: 'The Lord my faithful shepherd is.' Cakes and coffee were handed around. The choir sang delightfully, and we joined in the antiphon. When this was ended we walked with our tutoresses around town amid the sound of trombones from the balcony of the Brethren's house. We were all draped in white, walking two and two. We went to bed at night unspeakably happy." Of a Christmas it says: "In the morning we attended meeting in the chapel. Toward the close all the children under twelve years received burning wax tapers, and the gallery was illuminated with fifty candles, in commemoration of its being fifty years since Christmas was first celebrated at this place. And at such times are given representations of the stable at Bethlehem and the Virgin mother cradling the infant Savior in the manger by the beasts of the stall.

The church service of the Moravians is liturgical, consisting of a Litany very much like that of the Anglican Church. This fact, together with their acknowledged fervor, is worth noting by those who think a prescribed liturgy tends to cold formality.

The Sunday we were in Bethlehem the text was: "Rejoice in the Lord always." It was a simple, fervent, joyous discourse. In the afternoon, it being a festival day, a love-feast was held. The hymns—some of them German and some English—were printed on programmes scattered through the house. The services were mostly musical. The anthem-singing by the choir, supported by organ and orchestra, was, if anything, more impressive than the military mass at St. Michael's in Munich or the singing of the choir at St. Peter's. It combined what are often "put asunder"—artistic merit and deep spiritual fervor. In the evening was the communion service, which consisted of an hour of almost uninterrupted singing. The minister and his assistants wore white surplices. The bread was dry unleavened cakes, and as the people simultaneously broke their portions it sounded through the church like the clicking of a thousand bayonets fixing for the charge. The wine, poured from glass decanters, was passed in huge glass mugs. The people seemed determined to exalt the privilege of the cup for the laity, for which their Hussite ancestors, the Calixtines (so called from calix, a cup,) contended so strenuously in the days of trial. It seemed strange, moreover, to hear the sound of trombones at a communion service.

The community of goods is no longer maintained among the Moravians in this country. The doctrines of their church are those of the other evangelical sects. But they still have an individuality of Christian character which is worthy of study by their brethren in Christ. They are a historic church, a missionary church, an educational church and a joyous church. May their influence not be lost!—Christian Union.

The Voice of Animals.

BY PROF. JAMES ORTON.

Aquatic animals are mute. A world of radiates, mollusks and fishes, therefore, would be silent. Insects are about the only invertebrates capable of producing sounds. Their organs are usually external, while those of higher animals are internal. Insects of rapid flight generally make the most noise. In some the noise is produced by friction (stridulation;) in others, by the passage of air through the spiracles (humming.) The buzzing of flies and bees is caused in part by the vibrations of the wings, but it comes mainly from the spiracles of the thorax.

Snakes and lizards have no vocal cords, and can only hiss. Frogs croak and crocodiles roar by the vibration of the glottis. The huge tortoise of the Galapagoe Islands utters a hoarse bellowing noise.

The vocal apparatus in birds is situated at the lower end of the trachea, where it divides into the two bronchi. It consists mainly of a long drum with a cross bone, having a vertical membrane attached to its upper edge. Five pairs of muscles (in the songsters) adjust the length of the windpipe to the pitch of the glottis. The various notes are produced by differences in the blast of air, as well as by changes in the tension of the membrane. The range of notes is commonly within an octave. Birds of the same family have a similar voice. All the parrots have a harsh utterance; geese and ducks quack; crows, magpies and jays caw; while the warblers differ in the quality rather than the kind of note. Some species possess great compass of voice. The bell bird can be heard nearly three miles; and Livingstone said he could distinguish the voices of the ostrich and lion only by knowing that the former roars by day and the latter by night.

The vocal organ of mammals, unlike that of birds, is in the upper part of the larynx. It consists of four cartilages, of which the largest (the thyroid) produces the prominence in the human throat known as Adam's apple, and two elastic bands, called vocal cords, just below the glottis or upper opening of the windpipe. The various tones are determined by the tension of these cords, which is effected by the raising or lowering of the thyroid prominence. The will cannot influence the contraction of the vocalizing muscles, except in the very act of vocalization.

The vocal sounds produced by mammals may be distinguished into the ordinary voice, the cry and the song. The second is the sound made by brutes. The whale, porpoise, armadillo, ant-eater, porcupine and giraffe are generally silent. The bat's voice is probably the shrillest sound audible to human ears. There is little modulation in brute utterance. The opossum purrs, the sloth and kangaroo moan, the hog grunts or squeals, the tapir whistles, the stag bellows, and the elephant gives a hoarse, trumpet sound from its trunk and a deep groan from its throat. All sheep have a guttural voice; all the cows low, from the lion to the musk ox; all the horses and donkeys neigh; all the cats miaw, from the domestic animal to the lion; all the bears growl; and all the canine family (fox, wolf and dog) bark, howl and whine. The howling monkeys and gorillas have a larger cavity or sack in the throat for resonance, enabling them to utter a powerful voice; and one of the gibbons has the remarkable power of emitting a complete octave of musical notes. The human voice, taking the male and female together, has a range of nearly four octaves. Man's power of speech, or the utterance of articulate sounds, is due to his intellectual development rather than to any structural difference between him and the apes. Song is produced by the glottis, speech by the mouth.—Scientific American.

Talmage's Last Cigar.

After giving his experience with his first cigar in boyhood, Mr. Talmage speaks thus of his deliverance from the vile habit:

"But how about my last cigar? It was three o'clock Sabbath morning in my Western home. I had smoked three or four cigars since tea. At that time I wrote my sermons, and took another cigar with each new head of discourse. I thought I was getting the inspiration from above, but was getting much of it from beneath. My hand trembled along the line, and, strung up to last tension of nerves, I finished my work and started from the room. A book standing on the table fell over, and, although it was not a large book, its fall sounded to my excited system like the crack of a pistol. As I went down stairs their creaking made my hair stand on end. As I flung myself on a sleepless pillow I resolved, God helping, that I had smoked my last cigar, and committed my last sin of night study. I kept my promise. With the same resolution went overboard tea and coffee. That night I was born into a new physical, mental and moral life. Perhaps it may be better for some to smoke, and study at nights, and take exciting temperance beverages; but I am persuaded that if thousands of people who now go moping and nervous, and half exhausted, through life, down with 'sick headaches,' and rasped by irritabilities, would try a good dose of abstinence, they would thank God for this paragraph of personal experience, and make the world the same bright place I find it—a place so attractive that nothing short of heaven would be good enough to exchange for it. The first cigar made me desperately sick; the throwing away of my last made me gloriously well. For me the creaking of the midnight owl has ceased, and the time of the singing of the birds has come."

THE Rev. Edward Irving, the popular minister of the National Scotch Church in London, once managed to inveigle into his church, by talking to him about leather, a cobbler who professed infidelity. Irving's father was a tanner, and his acquaintance with leather was of old standing. "What do ye ken about leather?" was the first word from the cobbler that indicated a breach in his impregnable disdain of the clergy. As the discourse advanced the shoemaker exclaimed: "Odds! you are a decent kind of a fellow! Do you preach?" Finally he was induced to go to church, and he defended himself for so doing by pronouncing the opinion on Irving: "He's a sensible man; he kens about leather."

I BELIEVE that human will is God's grace. Those who say I cannot are those who think I will not. Human sadness! Who has ever consoled like the Holy Spirit? There may be situations where an angel's word would bruise the heart. He—he does not articulate a single word; he only pours, drop by drop, the divine oil upon the wound, and the wound closes.—Countess de Gasparin.

KIND words are among the brightest flowers of earth; they convert the humblest home into a paradise.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Congregationalists report in their Sunday schools for 1874 an aggregate membership of 385,338, a gain over the year previous of nearly 13,000.

A LONDON dispatch of April 16 says: "Four crowded revival meetings were held to-day. One, especially devoted to students for the ministry, took place at Spurgeon's Tabernacle. Mr. Moody delivered an address on 'Christian Work,' which was rapturously applauded. Thousands rose at his invitation to go into the streets and work for Christ."

A BOSTON correspondent, in speaking of the present status of the church at West Roxbury, of which Theodore Parker was once pastor, says the result of his teachings "is most distinctly seen in the loss of church-going habits, of reverence for the Sabbath and the Bible, and of faith not only in the authority of the Scriptures, but in the existence of anything supernatural in Christianity."

A PARSEE writes to the Bombay Guardian that the only hope of their race, numbering some 80,000 in India, being saved from extinction is in adopting Christianity. That journal states that there are thousands of educated Parsees in Bombay who have entirely lost confidence in their own system of religion, and are perfectly convinced of the truth of Christianity. The writer expects the time when vast numbers of them will come out for Christianity together.

THE Osiout circuit of United Presbyterian churches in Egypt is flourishing greatly. In 10 churches, which are mostly quite young, there are 108 communicants, representing a community of about 2,000 souls. In 13 village schools 459 scholars have been gathered. About 100 students, from many towns in Upper Egypt, crowd the Osiout Academy to overflowing. At this place 11 theological students are finishing their course. The sale of Bibles and other books amounted to nearly $1,000 last year.

THE Vicar of Owston Ferry has been heard from again on the tombstone question. Notwithstanding the advice of the Bishop of Lincoln to yield to the determination of the Wesleyans to enforce their rights, he declines to admit to the churchyard the tombstone which Mr. Keet intends to set up, unless that part of the inscription which he objects to is omitted or varied. Proceedings have accordingly been instituted against him. The vicar is soliciting subscriptions from his fellow-bigots to help him pay the costs of this action.

A PILGRIMAGE of English Baptists, says the Christian at Work, has recently been made to Rome. Hitherto Baptists and Unitarians have been especially singled out among Protestant heretics by the Catholics at Rome as unworthy of visiting the Catacombs. But this has been broken through, and on the occasion referred to the Baptists were allowed to view with becoming awe the reputed tombs of the apostles Peter and Paul. The guardian, however, before according his gracious permission, had applied to his superiors to leaven this mass of heterodoxy by sending a number of the faithful to enter at the same time as the strangers.

THE Roman Catholic clergy of the town of Grotte, in Sicily, together with 8,000 of the population, have declared themselves Old Catholics. The occasion of the movement was the excommunication by the Bishop of Girgenti of five priests who refused to accept the dogma of the personal infallibility of the Pope. The other priests of the town, twenty-five in number, took their stand on the side of their brethren, and informed the Bishop that they should henceforth refuse to recognize his authority, and were resolved to sever entirely their connection with Rome. The people followed the lead of their clergy, and in every church of Grotte a Te Deum was sung and worship according to Old Catholic rites commenced.

THE evangelical churches in Jerusalem now number about four hundred members, of various nationalities. Divine service is held on the Sabbath in seven places, in four different languages, besides meetings for prayer and the study of the Bible during the week, which are well attended. There is also a respectable evangelical church in Nazareth, and several villages in the vicinity have similar schools. The number of native Protestants in Galilee is from five to six hundred, and as many children in schools. This evangelical mission work in and around Nazareth is under the superintendence of a German missionary, Mr. Zeller, aided by two native deacons and a German catechist. The number of children taught in Protestant schools in all Palestine is estimated at fourteen hundred.

AMERICAN missionary organizations, with their headquarters at Constantinople, last year expended on account of evangelical work in the Turkish empire $246,635, as follows: American Bible Society, $40,000; Presbyterian Board, $50,000; the American Board, $156,635. Besides this, large amounts were expended for the support of American colleges at Constantinople, Beirut and Aintab. One of the gravest difficulties our missionaries have to encounter is that the Turkish government seeks to disown the promises guaranteeing religious liberty to all its subjects. The Record says that the withdrawal of the permit to print Turkish Scriptures, given in April, 1861; the seizure of colporteurs and their books, while engaged in a work recognized by the authorities as legitimate for a quarter of a century; the unjustifiable domiciliary visit of the police to the Bible House, with the intent to seize all books in Turkish; the severe and persistent persecution of converts from Islamism to Christianity, all indicate the temper of the times, and prove that our work is to meet with bitter, determined opposition.

The Wrath to Come.

The doctrine of everlasting punishment is prominent in the teachings of Christ and of the apostles. The Old Testament gives no uncertain sound on the subject, but is terribly full and explicit. Does this doctrine receive that attention at the hands of our preachers that its importance demands? Are the people faithfully instructed in the scriptural proofs and declarations which attest the eternal misery of the finally impenitent? Do we not too much take it for granted that the people understand and believe it, and go upon the assumption that its frequent statement and defense are practically needless? We fear there is more ignorance and unbelief on this point than many are aware of. Christians who believe it cannot be careless and unconcerned for themselves, nor can they look upon a perishing world with indifference. If the unconverted generally, who come within the range of the ministry and other gospel influences, had clear and strong convictions on the question they would not sit for years unmoved by the appeals and expostulations of divine mercy. Many orthodox Christians hold it with feeble and vacillating grasp, while the world at large either avoids the topic or rejects the conviction altogether.

Universalism is now committed pretty much to the final restoration of the wicked. Once it held to death and glory—that at death all souls alike entered into blessedness. This was so utterly unscriptural and unreasonable, and so much at variance with the moral instincts of mankind, that it finds few defenders at the present time. There are some universalists who hold to the final extinction or annihilation of the wicked, but restorationism is the creed of the most. Long ages of suffering will, they think, end in holiness and happiness for all. Future suffering there will be, but ultimately every soul shall be purified and exalted to heaven. The Roman Catholic dogma of purgatory is a species of restorationism, though limited in its application. It looks in that direction, and is entirely in opposition to the doctrine of the Bible that death ends man's probation. This heaven of purgatory doubtless works somewhat in Protestant minds. Not many years ago we came across an exemplary Methodist who had then been praying seven years for a deceased husband. Of course rationalists materialists, and the entire drift of atheistic doubt, are ranged against the future torments of the ungodly. There is no hell, or, if any, it is of limited duration.

This is the sum of the popular conviction, while in the ranks of professed orthodoxy there is a timidity and laxness which nearly yields the ground. A partial and one-sided gospel is preached, divine love and beneficence are made prominent; and the law of God and its sanctions are kept in the background. The right start was made by Wesley when he announced the one condition of admission into his societies: "A desire to flee the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins." This is a sound creed and effective. The everlasting punishment of the wicked is fundamental—the awakening element of the gospel, and the conviction which stirs men to action. Salvation from sin is in true repentance and faith as the immediate end, and as the only escape from the coming wrath. The perdition of ungodly men is awful and certain, unless saved from sin through faith in the blood of Christ. The atonement was provided to save the soul from death, and the love of God is manifested in the endeavor to snatch it as a brand from the burning. No man need be damned, none are left without the gracious ministries which make salvation possible, but he that rejects the offer of life must dwell forever in devouring flames.

This is the testimony of God, it is the emphatic teaching of the Savior, and of the apostolic preaching and writings, and the unfoldings of the apocalypse are filled with the lightenings and thunderings of this appalling truth. Sinners will have no desire to flee the wrath to come until they believe that wrath is coming upon them; neither are they likely to seek deliverance from sin until they feel that their sins are sinking them down to hell. They must realize that beyond the normal consequences of guilt and depravity, the self-enkindled fires of remorse and diabolical passion, there is to be a judicial reckoning and punishment, and that the condemned, already on fire with an inward hell, are to be cast into the lake of fire. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!" We have little faith in a religious interest or revival that does not carry with it, throughout these deep and pungent convictions, "a desire to flee the wrath to come, and to be saved from sin."

We would keep these points steadily in view. It is Methodist theology at any rate, and the key-note of the great awakening in the days of Wesley and Whitefield. It is good and wholesome doctrine for all. Parents would be more faithful and prayerful, our Sunday schools would be more effective, and the pulpit would be mightier if the wrath to come entered more into the staple of our meditations and teachings. How can we drone and doze over our duties, tune our formal songs, let our children grow up unconverted, and allow our neighbors to live and die in their sins, with this startling truth in our confessions? Do we believe in hell? The carefulness, earnestness and activity of our lives must answer. Our zeal for missions, our longing to bring the world to Christ, our giving and praying for the conversion of the heathen, must also answer. Our personal entreaties with sinners, our faithful work in the church, our wrestling with God for the awakening of sinners and for reviving power in believers, must contribute its part in response.

Are we far astray when we declare to the lukewarm professor, to him who is indifferent about missions, to him who hangs on as an appendage rather than as a living member of the church, that he does not believe? Says the Bedford seer: "Then I saw in my dream that there is a way to hell, even from the gate of heaven."

Did John Wesley Die in the Church of England?

The Protestant Episcopalians of the United States are constantly saying he did. They say it with the desire and the design to induce Methodists to connect themselves with the Protestant Episcopal Church. Before showing, as we think conclusively, that Wesley did not die in the communion of the Church of England, we have to say: Suppose Wesley did die in the communion of the Church of England—what is that to us? Mr. Wesley for fifty years invariably retired at nine P. M., and arose seven hours after, at four A. M. Must I adopt the same regimen? Must I be charged with being a heretic if I do not? Mr. Wesley wore a wig, according to the universal clerical fashion of his age. Must we wear wigs too, or be charged with breeding schism? Mr. Wesley held various opinions, psychological and otherwise, which we of the present age are not able to adopt. Whatever he held agreeably to Scripture and right reason, as we apprehend them, we cordially adopt, and no more. We do not mean to be held responsible for Mr. Wesley's opinions only so far as they seem to us to be agreeable to Scripture and sound philosophy.

But to come back to the original question. All who are familiar with Wesley's career and opinions know very well that he was at the outset a member of the Episcopal Church of England, of the straitest sect. He had no idea of organizing a distinct church; but the clergy of the Church of England excluded him from their pulpits; their bishops and other clergy wrote against him, for long years, a series of the most bitter and scurrilous pamphlets. The vast body of the people brought to Christ through his instrumentality refused to receive the ordinances and sacraments from the hands of the clergy of the Church of England because they were, many of them, men of impure lives. In America there were many thousands in the Atlantic States who were gathered from the "world" through the instrumentality of the ministers Mr. Wesley sent out from England. These also desired the sacraments. There were but few Protestant Episcopal ministers in America; but, if there had been, the people desired the sacraments, and would have them from none but the men who, under God, had led them to Christ. For the sake of order, and because he was loth to break with the Church of England, Mr. Wesley desired the bishops of the English Church to ordain some of his preachers, but they would not. Mr. Wesley, long years before this, had been convinced by the arguments of Lord King's "Primitive Church" that there were but two orders of ministers in the primitive church—"deacons" and "elders;" that a bishop was but an officer in the order of elders, like a speaker of the House of Representatives is an officer in that order of men—the first among equals, and nothing more. He had long been convinced, so he distinctly states, that the doctrine of apostolic succession was "a fable." For the sake of order, and no other reason, he hesitated to break with the Episcopal Church. But at last he was convinced that it was the will of Providence, as circumstances clearly indicated, and that it would be for the glory of God that he should do so by proceeding to ordain men to the order of deacons and elders, and setting apart one of these to be a superintendent—an overseer—or a bishop over the church in America. He proceeded formally to organize a church in America by three distinct acts:

First. He drew up a creed. This was in several particulars widely different from the articles or creed of the Church of England. There are thirty-nine articles in the prayer-book; there are but twenty-five in the creed of the Methodist Episcopal Church. An analysis of the articles of the Protestant Episcopal Church and those of the Methodist Episcopal Church shows the following wide differences: The third article of the Protestant Episcopal creed is omitted. A part of the sixth article is also omitted. The eighth article is omitted. More than half of the ninth article is omitted, and some words added in our article not found in the Protestant Episcopal article. A small portion of the eleventh article is omitted. All of the thirteenth article is omitted; so also is the fifteenth article. The sixteenth article is changed in ours from "sin after baptism"—which has a baptismal regeneration leaning—to "sin after justification." The seventeenth article, which teaches predestination, Mr. Wesley rejected and omitted altogether. The eighteenth is omitted. A part of the nineteenth is omitted. The twentieth article is greatly changed. The twenty-third is omitted; so also the twenty-sixth. The twenty-eighth, on baptism, is considerably altered. The twenty-ninth is omitted; so also the thirty-third, the thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth. If the adoption and maintenance of the thirty-ninth is necessary to constitute a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church of England, then Mr. Wesley, by the rejection of these articles, had ceased to be a member.

Secondly. Mr. Wesley drew up a ritual for the church he organized in America considerably different from that used by the Protestant Episcopal Church of England. Let us mark the difference between the form of baptism of infants in the Church of England and the form prepared by Mr. Wesley for the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The Protestant Episcopal requires "sponsors," and requires them to take vows for the child. Ours does not. The Protestant Episcopal Church makes with water the sign of the cross on the child's forehead. We do not. The Protestant Episcopal says the child is "regenerated" in baptism. Ours does not. These are wide differences. Mr. Wesley made them. So in the baptism of adults there is a considerable difference, and a distinct statement that the baptized is "regenerated," which Wesley has left out. In the forms of administering the holy communion there is also a considerable difference; so also in the celebration of matrimony.

Thirdly. In the discipline and church government, and the mode of conducting public worship, there is a wide difference.

Bishop Cummins has been deposed from the episcopal office, and is no longer considered in communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church, for organizing a church much less dissimilar from it than Wesley's organization in America.

Charles Wesley, who was most high church in his ideas of ecclesiastical order, says in a letter to Rev. Dr. Chandler, an Episcopal clergyman, that Lord Mansfield, the highest authority, told him that "ordination was separation" from the Church of England. John Wesley did not wish to admit to himself that he had done a deed that involved separation; but, nevertheless, the logical sequence cannot be escaped. He did by this act, and by the organization of a church different in doctrine, ritual and church government in America, become in the most palpable sense a separatist. So one of the learned Bampton lectures has shown; so Charles Wesley believed.

If, then, my brother, my sister, any clergyman or layman of the Protestant Episcopal Church comes saying to you, according to their wont, "that the Methodist Episcopal and Protestant Episcopal Churches are nearly the same, and that Mr. Wesley never separated from the Church of England, and that you ought to join them," just say that you are "surprised to find them so imperfectly informed; that there is a wide difference in doctrine, in the liturgy, in the mode of worship and in church government." We will not say you may add that you think it rude and ill-bred to ask you to abandon your convictions and principles.

Sunday School Suggestions.

—Helps, not substitutes, for study of the lessons is what all "lesson-helps" aim to be. These are the best "helps" which incite to the most study and individual thought. Not unlikely in many cases the use of lesson expositions, furnished to hand, does tend somewhat to check individuality; but we believe that in a still greater number of instances it tends rather to increase it. That which strongly operates to incite individuals to earnest thinking will surely excite a good deal of individuality of opinions and views. Call that a poor lesson-help which did not make you feel, after studying it, as if it had failed to note a great many thoughts that have flashed upon your own mind. A seed-thought ought to bear fruit many-fold.

Says Mrs. Crafts: "Christ evidently placed the heart-qualities of tenderness and love and faith very high among a teacher's qualifications. By the fire of coals he examined Peter with a view of commissioning him as a teacher. The first question of the examination was: 'Lovest thou me?' Love, then, is the teacher's first great qualification. The second question will, of course, be in regard to intellectual preparation. Again he speaks: 'Lovest thou me?' The third question will surely refer to intellectual or natural or social gifts and graces. Yet again comes the question: 'Lovest thou me?'

"Love, then, is the Alpha and Omega in the teacher's credentials, as a preparation to hear the command: 'Feed my lambs,' 'Feed my sheep.'"

—No part of the teacher's work, says Dr. Cuyler, is so important as the cultivation of conscience—a truth too much overlooked. The cultivation of a clear, strong, healthful and imperative sense of duty cannot safely be left to haphazard hints. The word ought must be made to mean something—to mean everything. Singing songs about the love of Jesus, the "Happy Land, far, far away," "Holding the Fort," etc., cannot be a substitute for a good conscience. "Doing" may be a "deadly thing," according to the intent of the hymn, but a conscience for right-doing is something that, in these naughty times, will bear considerably more stimulation and careful enlightenment. If the next generation of bankers, clerks, politicians, railroad managers, and farmers even, shall show as many unconscionable rogues as the present race of them has, then the much-glorified "International System of Bible Lessons" will have some serious sins of omission, at least, to account for.

—Ralph Wells (and he is good authority) has this to say about preparation for lesson-teaching: "I sit down and think for hours over the lesson, to think out what it means. When I think I am always singing, 'In psalms and spiritual songs:'

> "When all thy mercies, O my God,
> My rising soul surveys,
> Transported with the view, I'm lost
> In wonder, love and praise.'

"How can you teach the lesson without thinking it over till it burns in your soul? Till you find some great burning Scripture thought to arouse your heart you cannot use the teaching of another person. David tried on Saul's armor, but could not wear it. Better take the weapons God has given, if nothing but a pebble-stone from the brook. 'The Lord who delivered me out of the power of the lion and the bear will deliver me from the hand of Goliath also.' When the fire burns in my own heart, and I can see the skeleton of the lesson rise before me, the work is more than half done."

—An English Sunday school journal, the Sunday School Chronicle, makes a first-rate suggestion respecting week-day classes for the study, either in the form of lessons or popular lectures, on such subjects as Bible natural history, and other such like matters which the Scriptures mention incidentally. This grouping together, around some specific subject, of the mentions made in the various parts of the Bible of animals, of plants, of peculiar social customs, etc., if skillfully done, could not fail of being interesting and of heightening the interest in the word itself. Besides, it would give an increased sense of realness to Scripture history. And this feeling of its thorough realness is a next step to the exercise of real faith. Our public day schools cannot be depended upon for much Biblical instruction; the Sunday school—one hour a week—is not enough; there is still a missing link.

—In an excellent address given recently at a large Sunday school convention in London, Dr. Culross spoke of the "effects of the recent religious awakening on Sunday school work." The awakening, he said, demanded, for one thing, that Christ should get his right place in the teaching. He should be the heart of every sermon; still more of every Sabbath school lesson. Our special calling was not to teach the religious history of Joseph, of Moses, of Samuel, of David, or of the chosen people generally; the end for which our schools existed was to lead the children into personal acquaintance with Jesus; and these other things were of value only so far as they were helps to this. Just as he is not only in the Bible, but is the light that lights it up from beginning to end, so with our teaching; he is not only to be in it; he is to be the reason for it, and the substance of it; everything we do is to bear on the making of him known, and the commending of him to them, so that their hearts may be won for him. Dr. Culross also thought that the awakening ought to have the effect of making the spirit of the teaching brighter, more fresh and joyous.—Illustrated Bible Studies.

THE editor of the Western Methodist, writing from Nashville, says:

During the past two weeks the churches here have received a good many members as fruit of the meetings at the Exposition building, and doubtless will receive more, as there does not seem to be a decrease in the interest. From all that I learn, I judge that much truth has been preached and some dangerous heresies—much good has been done and some harm. There is not much stress laid upon law; the tendency, it is feared, is in the direction of Antinomianism. Repentance is a small thing; faith is not much more than an act of the intellect and will. But I cannot enlarge. I am simply suggesting caution. For all the good done I thank God, and pray for its increase and perpetuity. Mr. Whittle has not yet arrived from Chicago. He is expected to morrow, and will, when he comes, co operate with Mr. Bliss, as at Louisville.

I believe Messrs. Whittle and Bliss have promised to visit Memphis when they close their labors in Nashville. Allow me to say to the friends in our city, charged with the duty of providing a place of meeting, that no church edifice or public hall is large enough to hold the people who will certainly go to hear the preaching and singing of Whittle and Bliss. The best thing to be done is to secure, as was done here, the use of the Exposition building.

The board of trust of Vanderbilt University met to-day—a good attendance of the members. Much business has already been done, but I cannot particularize before next week. All the vacant chairs will be filled during the present meeting, and with the very best men. Only two new professors have as yet been elected, viz.: Prof. Alexander Winchell, of Syracuse University, New York, and Prof. James M. Safford, geologist of the State of Tennessee.

P. S.—This evening the board of trust elected two additional professors, viz.: James A. Harrison, A. M., now of Randolph Macon College, professor of modern languages, and A. A. Lipscomb, D. D., LL. D., late chancellor of the University of Georgia, professor of English criticism and the philosophy of history.

Other professors will be elected to-morrow. It is probable the chair of mathematics will not be filled during the present meeting of the board.

P. S.—This morning, May 4, the board elected the Rev. J. C. Granberry, D. D., of Virginia, professor of pastoral theology and homiletics, and R. M. McIntosh, of Nashville, professor of vocal music.

Education of Mexican Students.

We take the following extract from the forthcoming annual report of the Board of Missions:

"From time to time the superintendent of our mission in the City of Mexico, the Rev. Joel T. Daves, has urged the importance of educating in this country a number of young Mexican converts for the work of teaching and preaching in their own country. The want of money for a long time hindered the experiment advised by the superintendent; but we now report three young men at school in this country, learning English that they may more satisfactorily learn Protestantism and Methodism. It was believed also that familiar association with our people would be of very great advantage to them, giving them a knowledge of our methods of Christian work, and imbuing them with our spirit.

"Two of these young men—Francisco de Villegas and Juan Pardo—are at Emory College, Oxford, Ga., where they have been under efficient instruction since the latter part of January. They are under the special care of Prof. Rufus W. Smith, who reports very favorably of their spirit, application and progress. A gracious revival of religion, which blessed the college and community in March last, greatly interested and profited these young men. Another—Juan S. Valencia, a nephew of the late President Juarez—is at Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C. He has but recently entered upon his studies. It is expected that another will be sent to Wofford at an early day. We should add, in this connection, that Culleoka Institute, in the Tennessee Conference, agrees to provide for the education of two young Mexican students. It is expected that they will be sent forward by the superintendent during the coming summer. The board is at no expense in the matter of educating these young Mexicans, their traveling expenses to this country and their board and tuition being provided for by the faculties of the institutions where they pursue their studies, by the communities where they reside, and by the help of generous friends."

At this place we add a word that we hope may be taken into consideration: If any of our friends wish to help in this good work—and help is needed—let them write to the associate secretary.—Our Missionary.

REVIVALS IN VIRGINIA.—The work of revival still blesses our churches in Petersburg. More than a hundred have been converted at High Street, and numbers at Washington Street, Wesley chapel, and at Ettrick's. Let all pray that the work may spread through the entire Conference.

At Charlottesville our church has enjoyed a gracious season. We hope soon to have a full report of the meeting.

Bro. Garland has an interesting revival work in his church at Portsmouth.

Rev. R. J. Moorman writes from Culpeper, Va.:

"The work is still going on. God is blessing us. About fifty have been converted; most of them have joined our church."

In the town of Rocky Mount, Franklin county, Va., is at this time going on a general revival under the auspices of Revs. J. W. Tucker and D. F. Hodges. This meeting has been going on three weeks and is still progressing. Numbers have professed "faith in Christ" already, while about thirty are at the altar begging forgiveness.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE city churches, 1st Sabbath, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate of May 5, were favored with the services of both Bishops Keener and Marvin. The services, we understand, were well attended. Missionary collections were taken up amounting to some $1,000 or $1,500 for foreign missions, and a mass missionary meeting held in the evening, according to notice previously given.

In the afternoon a Rev. Mr. Arthur Millard, from London, greatly edified the Sunday school and a large audience at Chouteau Avenue church by a lecture on the "Rise and Fall of the House of Stuart, Considered in its Religious Aspect."

THE venerable Judge Edward McGehee, of Mississippi, was in our office on Monday last. He was on a brief visit to our city, and left for his home, near Woodville, on Tuesday evening, the eleventh instant. The judge is now half through his eighty-ninth year, somewhat infirm, but still erect, and able much of his time to attend to affairs.

SEE third page for "Our Young People's" department. Agricultural matter will be found on the sixth page.

EVERY ONE has his weak, assailable side, and it is the part of wisdom to learn betimes which it is, and then guard it by every possible defense. Many a promising religious career has been blighted and ruined by what seemed to be at first only a foible, but grew into a millstone about the neck. Christian life is only beautiful when symmetrical and complete.

Books and Periodicals.

TWO SERMONS—one on Creation and the other on Life—preached by Rev. W. S. Harrison, pastor in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Columbus, Miss., have been received. The scope of these essays is God in nature as seen in the forms and functions of manifold life—adverse to Darwinism and Tyndallism. From a hasty examination we judge the subjects have been touched upon with ability, and very clearly exhibited, so far as possible within such brief limits.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR SCHOOLS AND ACADEMIES. By Joseph T. Derry. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1875.

Mr. Derry is professor of ancient languages in Academy of Richmond County, Augusta, Ga., and the work is written from a Southern standpoint. It brings the history of the country down to General Grant's re-election for President in the fall of 1872. The last event mentioned is the death of Horace Greeley. The events of the late war, and the subsequent reconstruction legislation, are handled with candor and truthfulness. The text is in the form of questions and answers, and well adapted for school purposes. A 12mo of 352 pages, excellent type and binding, and handsomely illustrated. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

DAY THOUGHTS ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. By R. Tennent Shaw. Published for the author by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, 1875.

The title page speaks of "brief notes and instructions, also linking together into a chain of truths Old Testament Scripture with the New, and God's book of nature." We gather from expressions here and there that the author believes in the annihilation of the wicked, the birth of the Spirit, and the atonement in some sense, and that he runs a muck against all rabbis, doctors of divinity and church authorities of every sort. The book is a chaos of Scripture quotations, comments, opinions and nonsense, written in a most intolerable style. We can make neither head nor tail of it. Mr. Shaw must be a crazy monomaniac. His book is worthless—too crude and chaotic to be mischievous. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

WARRINGTON'S MANUAL. By William S. Robinson. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1875.

A very handsome little volume, compact, brief and well arranged. It is a concise and practical guide for members of deliberative assemblies in the principles and usages of parliamentary law.

SPAIN AND THE SPANIARDS. By N. L. Thiebin. Boston: Lee & Shepard; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1875.

Mr. Thiebin was sent to Spain by the New York Herald after the close of the Franco Prussian war, and the present volume is the result of his sojourn and travels in that country. He is a piquant and lively writer, and treats of the Carlists, Spanish republicanism, social condition, the character of the people, the leading statesmen and soldiers. His views of the Catholic Church and clergy are those of an easy and rather indifferent Catholic, and his estimate of the efforts of Protestant missionaries is in the vein of burlesque and contempt. Superficial and partial as the author is, he is full of vivacity, and his book is entertaining and not without fragments of valuable information.

WE AND OUR NEIGHBORS, OR THE RECORDS OF AN UNFASHIONABLE STREET. A novel. By Harriet Beecher Stowe. With illustrations. New York: J. B. Ford & Co.

This purports to be a "Sequel to My Wife and I." The story came out in the Christian Union as a serial. It makes a book of 480 pages. We have not read it, and never expect to, but it is by the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and we know that she can write. Mrs. Stowe writes much and very cleverly. The gifts, and perhaps also the grace, of the Beecher family are in her; and we are disposed to think she is about the best of her kin, notwithstanding the travesties, slanders and misrepresentations of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

CHRISTIAN ETHICS, OR THE THEORY OF MORAL MANHOOD AND LIFE OF DUTY. A text book for schools and colleges. By D. S. Gregory, D. D. Philadelphia: Eldridge & Bro., 1875.

Dr. Gregory is professor of moral science, logic and metaphysics in the University of Wooster, Ohio. His book is comprehensive, thorough, in details, and mainly in accord with those works best known in this field of thought and study. The arrangement is excellent and convenient as a text-book. So far as we have been able to examine the work, its teachings are such as we can commend. The author's views of slavery and on some other topics are not to our mind, but, on the whole, it is a work of merit, and adapted to its purpose as a text-book.

BRIGHT, CHEERY AND USEFUL with its fifty-five fine engravings and its multitude of practical articles and suggestions, is the American Agriculturist for May 1. Like every other copy this year, the number before us shows a decided improvement over the previous issues of this journal during its past thirty-three years of publication. It gives much plain, practical, trustworthy information for the household, including the little ones, for the garden, for the farm in all its departments—indeed for all classes. Its bold exposures of humbugs has been a feature of almost every number for many years. The current volume is giving a valuable series of practical articles by Prof. Atwater, showing "How Science Does and Can Aid Cultivators;" also a large number of engraved house plans and descriptions, with items of cost, or "Cheap and Convenient Homes for the People" in country and village. These last are alone worth many times the cost of this journal ($1.60 a year, postpaid.) Orange Judd Company, publishers, 245 Broadway, New York.

THE true philosophy of doing good is, first of all, and principally, to be good—to have a character that will of itself communicate good.

PAY POSTAGE.—Subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid at the old rates—viz.: two dollars per year—and whose subscriptions run into 1875, are required under the new postage law, which goes into effect January 1, to pay postage at the office of mailing. The subscription price hereafter includes the postage. Two cents per month each month that the subscription has to run, will be sufficient to pay for the ADVOCATE.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LIFE INSURANCE.—Should any reader ask our advice in reference to insuring his life, we should certainly advise him to consider the claims of a home company. The many millions which have been expended in paying premiums to companies at a distance, if invested at home, would have given our banks all the deposits they needed to sustain the commercial and agricultural industries and enterprises of our State, and built all the railroads we need. But it has gone from us, never to return during life. What excuse is there for this while such a company as the Louisiana Equitable is domiciled in our city, with a board of directors and corps of officers inferior to none on the continent in reliability and capacity. See advertisement in another column.

CITIZENS' SAVINGS BANK.—The above-named institution seems to be rapidly growing into public favor. The gentlemen managing it are, in our opinion, capable and trustworthy. The advantages of banks of deposit for small sums are manifold, and where a small interest can be realized and compounded it is far better to deposit in some safe place, rather than keep our earnings about our persons or in our houses, at much greater risk, and where it is earning nothing. The bank alluded to above is located in Grunewald Hall, on Baronne street. See advertisement in another column.

WHOLESALE GROCERY HOUSE.—We have had many inquiries from correspondents for just such an establishment as that of Messrs. Flash, Lewis & Co., whose advertisement appears in another column. This house is truly a first class house, and the firm may be relied upon to do justice to their customers. Their stock is very large, and their facilities for doing a large business at a small margin will be greatly to the advantage of their customers. See advertisement, or call at 38 to 41 Gravier, and 25 to 32 Peters street, and see their stock.

FIRE INSURANCE.—We call attention with pleasure to the eighteenth annual statement of the Union Insurance Company. We are glad to see that the affairs of the company are in a healthy condition, and that they are able, notwithstanding the many disasters of the year gone by, to declare a dividend. The company ranks deservedly high in public estimation, and we heartily recommend it to the confidence and patronage of our merchants and citizens.

PONTCHARTRAIN RAILROAD.—The above-named road, through the energy, enterprise and skill of the general manager, C. H. Allen, Esq., is being put in a state of thorough repair, and with new cars and rolling stock, and the latest improvements, will offer rare accommodations this season to those making excursions to the lake. See advertisement in another column.

DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, being careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelets holes in last strip, draw them tightly, causing the steel strips to close on the paper like a vise, and fasten firmly by "belaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and index in front.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Cultivation of Watermelons.

The great danger in the cultivation of this vine is the use of too much animal fertilizers. On the one hand, a poverty-stricken soil will yield neither early nor handsome fruit; and on the other hand, much stimulating manure is almost sure to burn them up. A compost of muck and lime will do this if there is not a particle of animal manure in it. It will not answer to mix a large mass—say three or four shovelfuls—in the hill, however nicely you reduce it and incorporate it with the soil. It should be applied the year before it is wanted, or at least six months beforehand.

Broadcasting or cow-penning is much safer than manuring in the hill. It will seem to many that to broadcast for such a crop as watermelons, that may be planted in hills ten or twelve feet apart each way, is a great waste. But if it is, the waste is not so great as when applied in the hill, and the whole crop is lost thereby. Besides, the waste is not so great as it seems when we broadcast; the feeding roots run far and wide, and it is for the health of the plant that it finds its sustenance abroad and by degrees.

Animal manures and lime must be used very sparingly any way, but leaf-mold and finely-decomposed muck may be abundantly employed. Decayed vegetation, especially old crab grass turned under, will greatly promote that mechanical condition of the soil which watermelons require. A heavy rain is very liable to ruin the crop, especially in its later stages. We hear a good deal of "scalding," but the thing which certainly happens with a great rain is the compacting of the soil. The melon vine is very sensitive to this. It is because new land is so porous that watermelons succeed so admirably on them. Straw or grass, mixed with the soil, puts it in something the same state as when it is new and the sod is full of little roots. To throw the land into beds or ridges is ordinarily desirable and often quite necessary, but even this will not avail in our fine sand against the compacting of one of our heavy showers if the earth is not lightened up with an abundance of strawy or peaty matter.—Bowen Brothers, Mandarin, Fla., in Florida Agriculturist.

Planting Trees.

Prepare ground for planting. Soil loosened two feet deep dries out less in summer than soil one foot deep. Rich soil grows a tree larger in one year than a poor soil will in three. Under-drained soil is cooler in summer than soil not under-drained. The feeding roots of trees come near the surface; therefore plant no deeper than necessary to keep the tree in the soil. If there be danger of its blowing over, stake it, but don't plant deep. One stake set at an angle is as good as two set perpendicular. Straw or mat set around a tree keeps the bark from rubbing. Large stones placed around a transplanted tree are often better than a stake. They keep the soil moist, admit the air, and encourage surface roots. Shorten the shoots at transplanting. This induces growth, and growth produces roots; and with new roots your tree is safe for another season. Unpruned trees produce leaves, but little growth, and less new roots.

Place the broad-leaved evergreens where they will get no sun in winter, yet away from where the roots of trees will make the ground dry in summer. Deep soil, but shallow planting, is all-important for them. In transplanting, take care of the roots. Good roots are of more importance than good "balls." Balls of earth are useful in keeping fibers moist; but don't sacrifice the best fibers five or six feet from the tree for the few fibers in the ball at the base. When roots are rather dry, after filling a portion of soil, pour in water freely. After all has settled away, fill in lightly the balance of the soil, and let it rest for a few days. This is as a remedy, not as a rule; for watering this way cools the soil, ultimately hardens it, and in other respects works to the injury of the transplanted tree.

Unless inside of a round rug or circular walk, don't plant trees or shrubs in formal clumps. They are abominations in the eyes of persons of taste. Meaningless irregularities form the opposite extreme. Remember "art is nature better understood."—Gardeners' Monthly.

Slugs.

Most people are only too well acquainted with slugs, but it is not quite so generally known where to look for their eggs, so as to destroy the coming pests in embryo, and a little attention directed to this point just now might save a deal of future trouble and loss. For those unacquainted with the appearance of the eggs it may be as well to mention that they exactly resemble small, slightly opaque, round, white glass beads, about the sixteenth of an inch in diameter. The most sure lurking ground in which to find what may be described as the nests is in an old neglected cabbage-bed, where the leaves have been allowed to remain lying on the ground, so as to form at once an attraction and a shelter from weather to the old slugs. Here there would probably be found a number of cavities, looking, at first glance, merely like holes in the ground, about the width of one or two fingers. On a closer examination these will be found to be little pits about two inches or more in depth, with edges overhanging at the top, and inside them (sheltered by earth and slime so as to look more than ordinarily disgusting) will probably be from two to five full-grown slugs. By carefully inserting the fingers, so as to remove the earth at the bottom of the hole, the deposit of eggs may be brought to light, usually well covered over with a slight depth of soil, and varying in number from six or ten upward, according to circumstances.

These nests—eggs, slugs and all—might be easily removed with a small trowel, and the whole collection should be completely destroyed. The slug egg is, in some cases, gifted with almost incredible vital powers, and no means short of burning or crushing can be regarded as sure destruction to those of which the eggs of one species can, as mentioned in Jeffrey's Conchology, volume i, page 135, stand being eight times dried in a furnace and yet retain their vitality and develop the young.

Another favorite hiding-place for the deposit of eggs is at the bottom of box borders, which, however ornamental in kitchen gardens, are apt to detract very much from the usefulness of the ground by the network of shelter they afford throughout the whole year, and over the entire area of the garden, to slugs and other garden pests.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

Buying and Planting Bulbs.

Whatever other spring flowers we may have, bulbs are essential, and the garden would hardly seem complete without its array of hyacinths, narcissus and all the rest of the bulbs which unite beauty, brilliancy and fragrance as do no other plants. October is the best month for planting bulbs, as they then have time to form roots before cold weather sets in; still, we have had very satisfactory results from planting in November, and have known them to be put in as late as January, by taking advantage of an open spell. We would much rather take the risk of late planting than be without their flowers in spring, and those who have neglected or omitted to provide a stock of bulbs can yet do so, even at this late day. There are some who give special attention to these plants, and they are always on the lookout for novelties; such persons need no advice from us. But to the majority, especially those of moderate means, a hyacinth is just as welcome without a name as with, provided it be of good form and pleasing color. Unless one cares for the named varieties, much more satisfaction may be had for the same money by leaving the selection to the dealer, merely indicating the colors desired, and their proportion. We have had very good results from the assorted bulbs which are sold at much lower rates than the named ones. By sending to a dealer for his catalogue the price can be readily ascertained. Another advantage in getting catalogues is that they give all necessary directions for cultivation, and, besides being a price list, the catalogue of the present day is a clever little hand-book of culture. We do not know how a few dollars can be more satisfactorily invested for the garden than in bulbs.—American Agriculturist.

A BIT of glue dissolved in skim milk and water will restore old crape. Half a cranberry bound on a corn will soon kill it. An inkstand was turned over upon a white tablecloth; a servant threw over it a mixture of salt and pepper plentifully, and all traces of it disappeared. Picture-frames and glasses are preserved from flies by painting them with a brush dipped in a mixture made by boiling three or four onions in a pint of water. Bedbugs are kept away by washing the crevices with strong salt-water, put on with a brush. Soft soap should be kept in a dry place in the cellar, and not used until three months old.

HERE is a very practical child Governess—"What did your godfathers and godmothers do for you?" (A pause. The question repeated. Another pause.) Elder brother—"Oh! if you please, Miss Elderberry, Charlie don't know. My godpa bought me a spoon and fork; but his godpa didn't do unything."

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 4 feet 6 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventh instant:

Mississippi river and bayous	1,042
Red river	571
Ouachita river	252
Railroads	2,124
Mobile	146
Texas	107
Total	3,242

On Saturday the market was inanimate throughout the day, but as three buyers took together 1,300 bales the sales summed up 1,750. A considerable portion of the offerings was held steadily at previous rates, but in some cases factors were willing to accept offers which they had previously refused, and which, in fact, were ⅛c. lower than Friday's rates. A good style of low middling, for example, which could not have been bought previously under 15⅛c. was sold at 15c., and a list previously held at 15⅛c. was offered at 15⅛c. On Monday, under the influence of dispatches from Liverpool and New York not calculated to stimulate the demand, there were but few indications at the opening of even an average business, and the reported sales up to 12.30 P. M. were confined to 500 bales, at prices showing increased weakness, but without any quotable decline, after which, in order to effect sales, factors were compelled to meet the demand more freely, and the entire business summed up 2,650 bales. A high style of good ordinary sold at 14⅝c., strict good ordinary as low as 14⅜c., low middling at 14⅞c., and a high style do. at 15c. On Tuesday 6,300 bales changed hands, mostly at steady prices, neglected kinds alone showing any irregularity and weakness.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,100 bales, against 4,950 for the corresponding time last week and 6,950 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 906,132 bales, against 1,147,623 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 243,919 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 243,669—3,366,054, against 3,909,722. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 30,783 bales to Great Britain, 61,652 to France and 188,901 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1875. NO. 21.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NASHVILLE, May 12.—The College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which had been in session for several days in the city, just before adjouruing sine die announced the following committee of fraternization to the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church: Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., Rev. James A. Duncan, D. D., and Landon C. Garland, LL. D.; and in accordance with a resolution of the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South the following commissioners, to meet a like commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church, to remove all obstacles to a formal fraternity between the two churches, were also announced: Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., Rev. R. K. Hargrove, D. D., Rev. Thomas M. Finney, D. D., and Hon. Truston Polk, of Missouri, and Hon. David Clopton, of Alabama, laymen.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 14.—The steamship Cyphrenes, from Sydney, brings intelligence that the New South Wales Parliament has included in the supply bill recently passed £5,000 for representation of New South Wales at the Centennial exhibition at Philadelphia.

CALAIS, ME., May 14.—The Methodist Conference here yesterday ordained six Chinamen as deacons.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 17.—The steamship Alaska brings Hong Kong dates to April 15, and Shanghai to April 17. A Chinese frigate will start on a cruise round the world in September next.

The Viceroy of the Chihli province, the most powerful subject in the empire, has petitioned the throne for the introduction of Western studies into the schools of China, and that candidates for public offices hereafter be examined in the sciences taught in foreign schools. As the Viceroy seriously urges these proposals, the Pekin government will not venture to resist the appeal.

The fighting continues in Formosa between the Southern Aborigines and Chinese troops, to the disadvantage of the latter. Reinforcements have been sent from Foochoo.

The period of official mourning for the late Emperor will terminate April 20, when a new decree of mouruing is expected in memory of the young Empress, who died March 24. The circumstances of her death have aroused general suspicion concerning its cause, and there is but little attempt to conceal the belief that fear of complications in case her expected child should be a son led to the sacrifice of her life.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 17.—The Governor proclaims June 3 as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer in apprehension of the grasshoppers.

LEXINGTON, May 17.—Gen. John C. Breckinridge is dead.

LEXINGTON, KY., May 18.—Gen. J. C. Breckinridge died of abscess of the liver, combined with consumption. His last hours were quiet and peaceful. On Sunday night his regular physician administered an opiate to him, after which he slept until late next morning. Then he was visited by Dr. Louis R. Sayer, of New York, who dressed the wound made by the operation on Monday of last week. The doctor, seeing that a discharge was taking place from the wound, expressed himself hopeful of the patient's rapid recovery with proper attention. After this the patient took some nourishment.

At three o'clock in the evening a change for the worse was perceptible, and his friends became alarmed. Stimulants were administered, but without effect. He sank rapidly until near five o'clock, when he became speechless, and died at fifteen minutes to six o'clock. He was conscious apparently to within a few minutes of his death.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, May 12.—The Post publishes an address from Gen. Aguirre to Navarreso and Basque, Carlists, inviting them to turn their arms against their leaders, who prolong the war to enrich themselves. He declares that the events of the past two years only show the inaptitude of Don Carlos, who has lost the right to the crown before God and the world. Aguirro is exceedingly popular, and it is confidently claimed his entry into Spain will cause a large defection from the Carlist ranks.

The Daily Telegraph's Vienna special says Bismarck, with the help of Russia, intends to obtain a public written guarantee of the status created by the treaty of Frankfort. Russia and Austria are ready to support it.

The weather is fair. Boats are plied between the Schiller and the shore. Many bodies, much cargo and twenty-two mail-bags have been recovered.

BERLIN, May 12.—It is stated the instigator of the plot to assassinate Bismarck was arrested abroad.

The papers give a confused statement of his relationship to several archbishops. It is loosely stated that the plot included the assassination of Wilhelm.

The Czar, Gortschakoff and Bismarck had a long conversation today.

The Roman Catholic bishops of Prussia have decided to dissolve even the religious orders which the State tolerates, being unwilling to see them subject to governmental supervision.

PARIS, May 13.—A telegram has been received at the Russian embassy stating that the Czar has left Berlin thoroughly convinced that conciliatory sentiments of a nature to insure the maintenance of peace prevail there. Similar intelligence has been communicated to all the Russian legations in Europe.

LONDON, May 18.—A special dispatch from Madrid to the Daily News reports that the papal nuncio has made a formal demand for the restoration of Catholic unity in Spain, and the government replied that it is resolved to maintain liberty of worship.

ROME, May 18.—Fan Fulla, a ministerial organ, authoritatively states that the Pope has resolved to convoke the Vatican Council again at an early date, to discuss ecclesiastical reforms.

Improvement of the Mouth of the Mississippi.

THE EADS CONTRACT.

Col. James B. Eads, in pursuance of his contract with the government for improving the mouth of the Mississippi on the jetty system, has sublet a contract for constructing 350,000 yards of fascine work, and 100,000 cubic yards of stone work; also a large amount of timber work, piles, etc. The contractor is Col. James Andrews, of Alleghany City, Pa., who built the stone work of the St. Louis bridge and the tunnel. Col. Andrews is a well known contractor of large means. He is to furnish at his own cost steamers, tugs, barges, boats, pile-drivers, and all necessary appliances, and is to put in 50,000 yards of the work before he receives any pay. As the work progresses he is to receive $300,000, the balance to be paid only after the government pays Capt. Eads. The first payment Capt. Eads is to receive is to be when twenty feet of water shall have been secured. Every time two additional feet, up to thirty feet, is secured he is to receive $500,000 more.

By the terms of the contract with Col. Andrews half of these payments are to be received by him, and the other half, until the completion of the work, will be held to secure the advances made by the South Pass Jetty Company. A company has been formed under this title, with a capital stock of $750 000, but Capt. Eads thinks that it will be necessary to call in only $300,000 of this amount. The company, in consideration of its advances, is to have 10 per cent. interest on them, and 100 per cent. profit, secured like the advances themselves. One condition of Col. Audrews' contract is that he is to do as much as is necessary to insure 26 feet of water, and construct the amount of work specified for $2 500,000. A part of this compensation, however, is only to be paid after 30 feet of water is secured.

The government is to pay Capt. Eads $5,250,000 for the work, on his securing thirty feet of water. Col. Andrews' contract embraces a large part, but not all the work that will be required. There are very strong parties interested in the contract. He is to commence the work as soon as the South Pass Jetty Company's stock is subscribed to the amount of $300,000. A large portion of it is already subscribed, mainly by citizens of St. Louis.—New Orleans Picayune.

From the Work.

MONTGOMERY, LA.—Mr. Editor: All the friends of the cause of God, and especially the ministers who are acquainted at this place, will no doubt be glad to hear that there is a flourishing Sunday school in the town of Montgomery, La. We reorganized early in the present year, and have plenty of books and a splendid corps of teachers. Both young and old of our town and community have, from the reorganization to the present, manifested considerable interest in the school.

On Saturday, May 1, we had a celebration, the preparations for which were hastily made, but, all things considered, it may be termed a complete success. The school was formed in procession at nine A. M. and marched to a beautiful grove a few hundred yards from the school-room. Our picnic dinner was most excellent. The people were, almost without exception, united in preparing for the occasion.

H. M. RAGAN, Supt.

CENTERVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The first Quarterly Conference for this circuit convened on the seventeenth and eighteenth instant. Our presiding elder, Bro. Joseph H. Stone, reached the appointed place on Saturday morning. In the evening the Conference was held, and the various interests of the church were considered. The meeting was protracted until Wednesday night. The Lord was with us, manifesting himself in great power. Sinners were convicted and six were brightly converted. The church is powerfully revived. Up to this date six have joined the church. Pray much for us, that this good work may continue to grow till all may find Jesus precious to their immortal souls. Your brother in Christ,

W. R. WHATLEY, P. C.

Quarterly Meeting in the Country.

LITTLE BUSINESS, MEAGER MISSION, Louisiana Conference, April, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: A quarterly meeting in your great city is not to be mentioned in comparison of interest with our country quarterly meetings.

In each of your churches you have a preacher, and each congregation thinks their preacher is "the preacher;" and so when the presiding elder comes around once a quarter it is just a change of preachers and a change of collections.

Your system of finance is so well regulated and sustained, to say nothing of prospective chances in the way of fairs, concerts, and such like perquisites, that the business may be viewed and reviewed in a very short time and with very little excitement—a Tuesday night's meeting in the preacher's office or in Bro. Harp's store, and then an adjournment sine die. With us how different! Our presiding elder is a marked man, tall and commanding, and our Quarterly Conferences are great occasions, full of interest, and in interest and occurrence are like angels' visits; for we have known one quarter to make up for a whole year, and very often two stand us instead of four. The notice is given out long before the event, and the church, the world, the flesh and the devil brace themselves for the occasion. The preacher in charge rises gradually in importance as the day approaches; it is his quarterly meeting; but when the elder arrives he then sinks into a state of eclipse, becomes modest and retiring, and takes upon him the office of a servant—the elder's vanishing-point.

On Saturday morning the elder preaches to the church, and at the close of the services gives out the notice: "The official members will meet me here as soon as they possibly can after dinner."

The elder goes to dinner with Sister Brown, and takes the preacher in charge with him. The dinner is worthy of the occasion; but the preacher's heart is too full and his mind too anxious for him to enjoy the dinner as much as he could in calmer moments. He is thinking of the meeting. I wonder if Bro. B. will have time to come? Will Bro. C. find the sun too oppressive? How will they stand the assessment? Then that complaint must be entered against that well-meaning brother who can come into town every mail-day, and yet never remembers the day when the church meets. Then how am I to reconcile this report of the spiritual condition of the church with the report financial? What if the stewards do not bring enough to supplement this meager report? And thus there are a thousand anxieties upon his mind to be endured:

There is a limit to everything, even to a good dinner. The meeting begins.

"A charge to keep I have."

Very good attendance. Three present we hardly hoped to see. No appeals. Any complaints? Yes. Preacher a little embarrassed. Complaint against the stewards for not attending. Mr. Secretary, please make a note of that on the minutes to come up—in your ADVOCATE, Mr. Editor.

We live through somehow to the question: "Any miscellaneous business?" Then every member has his "say," and we all begin to be sociable and more at ease. The climax is reached at the question: "Where shall the next Quarterly Conference be held?" "Little Business" has it, by the third ballot, over the heads of the Big Creeklts and the inhabitants of Palestine.

The Conference ends with the doxology, and "preaching to-night at early candle-light."

Now the meeting begins in earnest. The change is from the serving of tables to the free and priceless gospel, and the interest increases. The elder makes the appeal: "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

Sunday comes—a beautiful day; preaching all day long. Monday, preaching again. I shall not give you a detailed account, but just a few points in reference to the meeting. Every day and every night the theme is Jesus. He is the Christ. Come to him, believe on him, follow him. This is the substance of every sermon.

Now comes "the protracted part of the meeting." Everybody who does not wish to be approached on the subject of religion will find it in order to retire now. We give you a few moments. Some few faint hearts retire—to stand on the outside, where they may still hear and see through the open windows—but many remain, the greater number out of pure motives; they wished to learn of Jesus. Others out of curiosity, and still others to see "the fun." Oh, there was a crowd of souls, thoughtless and earnest, dead and alive, for each one of whom Jesus died and rose again. Now the elder and preachers, and those "who call the Lord their own," go to speak of Jesus to these souls.

Well, this common-sense way of speaking of Jesus and his love took with the people. We found some strangely ignorant of the power of God on earth to forgive sins. Conversion! The great fact was not in all their thoughts. We had to meet ridicule and smiles; but these all ceased when they saw the earnestness of these lovers of Jesus, for they spoke of him and his work as if they really believed and felt all they said of him. The answers of some of them would stir the heart of every one who knew the gift of God. We took our seat by one and asked: "Are you a Christian?" "No; I am a foreigner." He did not know how eloquently true his answer was, nor did he know how exactly he described his state. Yes, true indeed. Without God in God's world! And this is what we speak to you for: that you may no longer be a foreigner, but a citizen of heaven and a member of the household of God.

Our meeting came to a close at the end of eight days, and the result was: Conversions, ——; the church revived, her numbers increased, religion established here on a firmer footing, full hearts and new faces.

Some of us will go in the strength of this meeting for more than forty days. Nay, to some it will be the great epoch in their eternal history.

There were other fruits—sure signs of a true meeting. There were persecutions, opposition, ridicule. A sword entered many a heart, and there were divisions among families—husband against wife. Doors were nailed up against returning worshipers, and frowns and scorn were the welcome where sympathy and love were expected. Many strange things I might tell of persecutions and revilings for Christ's sake, which, if written in a book, the world would not receive. Our next Quarterly Conference will be in July. Come, Mr. Editor, and we will let you room with the elder.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN SMITH, JR., P. C.

Meeting of the Board of Missions.

The Board of Missions held its annual meeting in the mission-room at the Publishing House, May 7-10. All the Bishops, except Bishop Paine (who was sick,) were present. The session was very pleasant, and a strong purpose prevailed to enlarge, as far as possible, the missionary operations of the church. The board determined to assess for the ensuing year $100,000 for foreign missions, including the weaker Conferences that need help from this board. This sum will be divided among the Conferences, and reported to them at their approaching sessions. The assessments will be made on the basis of those for the support of the Bishops. The appropriations were made not on the ground of the necessities of each mission, but in view of the means the board is able to command. Would that we could have appropriated four times the amount mentioned.

The collections made the past year for domestic and foreign missions exceeded those of any previous year, amounting to $107,570.80. Much to the regret of all the members of the board, Dr. Haygood, the associate secretary, who had been elected for one year twelve months ago, and who was re-elected to serve, declined; but his place has been supplied by the election of the Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D., who is to serve without any pecuniary remuneration—certainly generous in Drs. Haygood and Kelley to serve the board "without money and without price." The board addresses itself to the work with new zeal, encouraged by the successes of the past. The following are the appropriations for the ensuing year:

China	$7,500 00
Mexico	11,500 00
Indian Mission Conference	2,000 00
German Mission Conference in Texas and Louisiana	4,500 00
Western Conference	2,000 00

Incidental and contingent fund	5,000 00

J. B. MCFERRIN, Sec.

MR. ROBERT BONNER, of the New York Ledger, has given the large sum of $100,000 toward the erection of Dr. John Hall's new church in New York.

Board of Missions.

NOTWITHSTANDING the financial gloom which so widely overspreads our beloved South, it is with devout thankfulness to almighty God that we are able to report an advance in the funds of the board. This is not our crowning joy. From all parts of the church assurance comes to us of more intelligent interest and inquiry into our mission work. Added to this, the reports from our missions, almost without exception, are of a most gratifying character, while laborers in abundance are standing ready, saying to the Bishops and board: "Here am I; send me." And this notwithstanding we assure them, as truth compels us to do, that their support will be inadequate, and hardships in many cases great. We regard the missionary spirit in the church, as shown in the willingness of men to go, the highest index of church life, and the presence and favor of God. The calls in all our mission-fields are most imperative for additional laborers. The voice of the church, in the form of contributions, will secure a glorious and triumphant expansion. To help forward the tide of church interest the board determined to bring itself, through its secretaries, more directly into contact with the pastors and people. Every pastor in the church, whose postoffice we can obtain, will soon hear from the secretaries, and be furnished with details for so carrying out the assessment plan of the General Conference as to reach every member of the church and congregation. The gospel doctrine that all must help must be made to interpenetrate the church, both in theory and practice. Brethren, we must and can accomplish this. We write on our banner: "Every man a witness;" and, through praying, preaching and methodical labor, must and will make our motto a fact. We invite unlimited correspondence upon the part of the friends of missions, specially of Sunday school superintendents and others who desire to do special missionary work. We will take great pleasure in pointing to you particular objects of interest, and giving you reports from time to time of results from your investments. Write, however, definitely, and, as far as may be, concisely.

Dr. Haygood found it necessary to resign the position of associate secretary, to which the board unanimously re-elected him. He had nobly filled his place, and all part with him with deep regret. The undersigned accepted the office, as Dr. Haygood had done, without any salary attached. He cannot give full time, but in the service of the grandest cause of earth, and in the name of the Master, he is ready to render any aid he may be able to the long-tried and trusted veteran senior secretary, Dr. McFerrin.

Our Missionary the board thought it best to discontinue. It will be closed after a short life, as we trust not in vain, so soon as present obligations to subscribers will allow. We shall therefore make heavy drafts on the well-known kindness of our various church papers. We shall often call on them for room for us, and trust they will more often speak from their own warm interest in the cause. "Every man in his sphere a witness."

D. C. KELLEY, Associate Sec., Board of Missions M. E. C. S.

THE salaries of our Bishops for the past year, says the Western Methodist, were paid in full out of the collections for the Bishops' fund. So we learn from Dr. Redford, the treasurer. This is most gratifying, and remarkable in view of the general financial pressure.

Fraternal Delegates and Business Commissioners.

Our General Conference, which met in Louisville in May, 1874, received three delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) conveying the fraternal greetings of that body to us, and expressing their wish to establish "truly fraternal relations" with their "Southern brethren."

The deliverance and attitude of Southern Methodism on this subject may be seen in the following extracts from the report adopted on the occasion:

"Measures preparatory to formal fraternity would be defective that leave out of view questions in dispute between the Methodist Episcopal Church and ourselves. These questions relate to the course pursued by some of their accredited agents while prosecuting their work in the South, and to property which has been taken and held by them to this day against our protest and remonstrance. Although feeling ourselves sorely aggrieved in these things, we stand ready to meet our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the spirit of Christian candor, and to compose all differences upon the principles of justice and equity.

"It is to be regretted that the honored representatives who bore fraternal greetings to us were not empowered also to enter upon a settlement of these vexed questions. We are prepared to take advanced steps in this direction, and, waiving any considerations which might justify a greater reserve, we will not only appoint a delegation to return the greetings so gracefully conveyed to us from the Methodist Episcopal Church, but will also provide for a commission to meet a similar commission from that church for the purpose of settling disturbing questions.

"Open and righteous treatment of all cases of complaint will furnish the only solid ground upon which we can meet.

"Resolved, That this General Conference has received with pleasure the fraternal greetings of the Methodist Episcopal Church, conveyed to us by their delegates, and that our College of Bishops be and are hereby authorized to appoint a delegation, consisting of two ministers and one layman, to bear our Christian salutations to their next ensuing General Conference.

"Resolved, That in order to remove all obstacles to formal fraternity between the two churches our College of Bishops is authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three ministers and two laymen, to meet a similar commission authorized by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to adjust all existing difficulties."

At their late meeting the Bishops made the following appointments:

Fraternal Delegates.—Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., Rev. Jas. A. Duncan, D. D., and Landon C. Garland, LL. D.

Commissioners.—Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., Rev. R. K. Hargrove, D. D., and the Rev. Thomas M. Finney, D. D.; Hon. Truston Polk, of Missouri, Hon. David Clopton, of Alabama.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Bishops' Meeting.

The Bishops at their meeting last week, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, made a thorough survey of the work throughout the connection, and laid their plans for the ensuing year. The appointments for the sessions of the Annual Conferences will be found in this issue. Bishop McTyeire has kindly handed us the following items gathered from the minutes of the meeting:

Thanks were heartily voted that eminent artist, Mr. Washington B. Cooper, who has presented to the Bishops' room the portraits of each member of the Episcopal College, and also the portraits of Bishops McKendree, Soule and Early. These likenesses are much admired; some of them are especially striking. The artist's skill is equaled only by his generosity. Messrs. Freeman & Orchard have presented neat gilt frames for these portraits. The work of Freeman & Orchard is well known in our city, and it does them credit anywhere. For this handsome gift they receive, as they deserve, the thanks of the body.

The votes of the Annual Conferences on a change of the General Rules submitted by the last General Conference were submitted by Dr. T. O. Summers, book editor, and counted. The result was found to be: In favor of the proposed change, 1,296; against it, 1,564. The new rule was therefore declared to be lost.

The week of prayer is appointed to begin this year on the eighth of August, the Friday included to be observed as a day of fasting and prayer for God's special blessing upon the missionary labors of the church, and for our institutions of learning.

The Woman's Mission Society of Nashville was commended, in its example and methods, to the membership generally, and the hope expressed that similar associations would be formed in other places.

THE approaching commencement at Trinity College, says the Raleigh Christian Advocate, will be a brilliant occasion. Bishop Marvin will preach the commencement sermon, and Dr. Munsey will deliver the literary address. The sermon before the Theological Society on Sunday before commencement is to be preached by Rev. E. A. Yates. The new chapel will be completed by that time, and the crowd will be the largest ever assembled at the college on commencement occasion.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

GIVE ME THY HAND, FATHER, GIVE ME THY HAND.

Dedicated to little Reigart Belford Lowry Magruder, whose baby voice, saying, "Gi' me hun', papa, gi' me han'," as he trudged through the sand by his father's side, suggested this prayer as earnest and child-like.

BY REV. PRESTON NASH.

'Tis the last night of bondage my soul owes to sin,
And the door-posts are sprinkled, the passover spread,
And all sandaled and girded I wait to begin
The long journey, by pillar or cloud to be led;
And with staff on the threshold of duty I stand,
Praying: Give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

While the spirit is binding my foes in its might,
That unhinder'd my journey in hope be begun,
I am counting the slow hours that shackle my flight
From the darkness of Egypt to Canaan's glad sun,
And I pray as I tremblingly wait the command:
Only give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

The night-watch will be sunshine, the sunshine be shade,
Both be lost to extremes that I faint not nor fall;
The cleft rocks cool my thirst, and my hunger be staid
By the east winds and dews—thy servitors all—
And my feet never tire as I haste o'er the sand,
If thou'lt give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

Though the sea roll before me in billows of night,
And the mountains refuse me a pathway around;
Though my foes then be madden'd to hinder my flight,
And their cruise pale my cheek with its swift-coming sound,
I will follow the path through the sea as on land,
If thou'lt give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

Are there battles to fight? Can't I flee from my foes?
For my poor coward soul dreads the danger to face;
It will shudder with fear when the clarnet wind blows,
It will cry when the sword its deep, reeking wounds trace;
Yet I'll shout in the fray, when the battle is planned,
If thou'lt give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

And through all of my pilgrim probation in life,
As I flee from the wrath to inherit the rest,
I will shun not the danger, I'll flee not the strife,
I'll be happy in tears, in each woe I'll be blest,
If in these, as my guide through this poor, darken'd land,
Thou wilt give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

And at last when from Pisgah I enter the vale,
And my weary feet stand on the Jordan's cold shore,
Then my glad heart shall swell to the rapturous hail
As it sweeps from that land where I'll wander no more;
And I'll pray one last prayer as I step from the strand;
'Twill be: Give me thy hand, Father, give me thy hand.

WASHINGTON, FLA., May 6, 1875.

Letter from the Country.

MR. EDITOR: It is like seeing the well-remembered face of an old friend to be able to peruse the columns of the ADVOCATE once more. The last copy (April 15) is particularly interesting. On the first page we have "News of the Week," "Conference Items," "Letters," "Revival Notices," and, best of all, the article on "An Old Soldier of the Cross." This, and the poem by the aged Mr. Johnson, was highly appreciated by my mother, who is herself "an old soldier of the cross," in her eighty-second year. She dates her conversion October 17, 1811, and celebrates the anniversary as her second birthday.

On the second page is the poem mentioned above, and "John Smith's" letter to "Jones." "John" is quite facetious, and one cannot help sympathizing with "Jones," especially if he is a married man. Going through "Vanderbilt" did not add much to his greatness, or his stature either, if wind was his only diet. But "John" is not a "croaker." Webster defines croaker: "One who complains unreasonably." Is it not a little unreasonable to say that "some men (that is, some preachers) are leading Methodism to ruin, and that all the flowery reports about revivals," etc., are mere bombast? His eight years of experience have revealed "no broken hearts." "The stylish, verbatim et literatim sort of preaching we have" now is not what it used to be. Query: Did "John" ever hear or read one of Bishop Bascom's sermons? They are what he calls "stylish." "John" laughs at "Jones" about going through "Vanderbilt," then quotes Latin and spells literatim with two t's. We like the ADVOCATE, and do not relish having our editor "hauled over the coals." The Nashville editor will have to defend himself; but we feel like picking up the gauntlet for our "New Orleans man." An editor has more to do than "John" in "his philosophy ever dreamed of," and one of the things is to walk right along in his own well-beaten path, and not try to please all, like the old man in Æsop's Fables, who walked awhile, rode awhile and carried the mule awhile to please everybody, and had to give it up at last. An editor is generally supposed to be ubiquitous, and must go here and there at the beck and call of every one. Often he sits writing by the midnight lamp when he ought to be asleep, like other Christians. And the advertisements help to keep the paper up. If a man sends "his dime" to find out how to get rich, and never hears from it again, he ought to keep "his dime" next time, and learn wisdom by experience. The other articles and the "Obituaries" are very interesting and instructive.

"Heavier the Cross" is a beautiful poem on the third page. "The Red Hat" is ominous of what may be. There is a point beyond which endurance ceases to be a virtue, and the sooner the Americans put their veto to this hydra-headed monster, "vaticanism," the better. All on this page is good reading, the "Religious Intelligence" columns especially interesting.

On the fourth page the editorial and the article by Dr. Walker, on the death of Rev. John Wilkinson, brought sadness to many homes and grief to many hearts. The editorial on "The Worry of the World" is rich, suits the time—suits every one. It is hopeful, helpful and encouraging. The other articles pay for a perusal. We find nothing objectionable on the fifth page. Take a loving look in "The Child's Corner," laugh at "Grandpa Goodale's" funny story, find no fault with the advertisements on the seventh and eighth pages, and so ends the review of the ADVOCATE of the fifteenth of April.

Obituaries.

DIED, near Kosciusko, Miss., Rev. W. S. WINGFIELD. I was very much pained on receiving a letter from Sister Wingfield, informing me of the death of my dear friend and brother in the gospel. I will take the liberty to give you a portion of her touching letter, which is of itself a very good obituary. She says:

"Dear Bro.: It is with a bleeding heart that I address you. I have been called to give up the dearest treasure of my heart. My dear husband died on the seventeenth of this month (March.) He was sick just one week. The last morning he slept so quietly that we did not know he was dying more than an hour or two before. We tried to rouse him, but could not. Oh, the terrible shock, so unexpected to me! I know that he is in a better land; but, oh, it is hard to be resigned. He talked to me a short time before he was taken sick. He said that he might die before I did; that he felt prepared to go; that he would like to live for my sake, and to raise his children, if it was the Lord's will. His health has not been very good for some time, but he was able to attend to his school. I wish you to write his obituary, as you were a dear friend of his, and acquainted with his Christian character. He has been engaged in teaching and preaching ever since he left Toomsuba. He was born in 1818, in the State of Georgia, and came to Alabama. He worked in the Conference until his health became too feeble. I cannot give you the dates, as I have forgotten them. We moved to this place in January; had a good school; lived eight miles from Kosciusko.

E. W."

I first met Bro. Wingfield when he was stationed at Toulmanville, near Mobile. I soon learned to love him, for he was a plain, unassuming Christian minister of the gospel. His modest, pious soul would not suffer him to make a show of himself. He lived several years at Citronelle, Ala., and taught school. Then he moved to Lockhart, Miss., and took charge of a school, but was soon stricken down with a severe attack of rheumatism, and was compelled to give up his school. He so far improved in health that he came to Toomsuba and taught awhile. It was at the latter place that I became more intimate with him. We labored together in the pulpit and altar, and took sweet counsel together: and I must say that a sweeter and more Christian-spirited minister I never met. To know him indeed was to love him. Bro. Wingfield was a child of affliction for several years before his death. He often unbosomed himself to me. He had my earnest sympathies, and I felt that I was made better in his companionship. I often think of a sermon he preached while attending one of my appointments with me. He was at the time under a heavy cloud on account of temporal affairs. His text was: "I waited patiently for the Lord," etc. His soul seemed full of trust in his Father's goodness. His thoughts came fresh from the mint of his soul. He left the pulpit baptized afresh by the Comforter. O how often is it the case that when "we suffer with Jesus we are also glorified together," measurably even in this life!

GEORGE BANCROFT.

MRS. IDA D. DOLLERHIDE was born in the State of Tennessee, March 18, 1836, and removed to Louisiana in early life. She was married to Mr. R. H. Dollerhide July 20, 1854, in the parish of Carroll, State of Louisiana, by William T. Oliver, Esq. Her maiden name was Sessums. She died at home, Delhi, La., April 28, 1875, surrounded by her husband and five children. She joined the Methodist Church at Manticello, Carroll parish, in the year 1859, and continued a faithful, devoted and zealous member of the same during life.

When, during the troubious times, her husband moved to Texas she obtained her church letter and lost no time in affiliating with the church in that State. On their return they sojourned for a few months in Shreveport, and Sister Dollerhide came provided with a certificate of church membership, and in the presence of a great congregation, on Sunday, at a quarterly meeting held by the writer of this notice, then presiding elder of the district, she again witnessed a good profession by identifying herself with the people of God there.

She loved the church, which was to her "the communion of saints;" and hence, wherever she might be, she sought out the people of God, the church of her choice, and said unto them: "Whither thou goest I will go; where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried."

Though Sister Dollerhide was so zealous for the church and so deeply devoted to God, so guileless in heart and so holy in life, yet such was her diffident estimate of herself, and of her spiritual attainments, that her religious experience was not as buoyant and as full of comfort as her eager spirit longed to know and to enjoy. But "at the evening-time there was light." She saw the "Sun of Righteousness" more vividly than ever; saw that "Christ is all;" "that he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him;" that unto them which believe he is precious. Among the last words which I heard her lips pronounce was the name of Jesus: "Sweet Jesus! Precious Jesus!" Thus she sweetly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

MRS. SARAH A. COONS.

Sister SARAH A. COONS, wife of the Rev. R. W. Coons, of the North Alabama Conference, died February 6, 1875, at Springville, Ala. Sister Coons was left an orphan when a child, and was raised by her uncle, Ezekiel Ornel. She embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church in her eighteenth year. In August, 1857, she was married to her now grief-stricken husband. Sister Coons was a woman of marked characteristics—self-possessed, firm, kind and amiable. Though deprived of the advantages of an early education, yet she had a strong, vigorous intellect, and always took broad, liberal views of every subject. Her Christian character was beautifully symmetrical, being the outgrowth of a clear, deep experience of personal piety. Her faith was strong and simple, firmly fixed on the promises of God. She loved the church and was devoted to all of her interests. She knew what it was to make sacrifices for Christ and his cause; but no one met the sacrifices incident to an itinerant life more cheerfully than did she. In this respect she was not only a helpmate to her husband, but also frequently cheered other itinerants in the hour of trial and gloom. She was peculiarly adapted to the itinerant work, knowing how to provide for her family in the absence of her husband, and how to cheer him when he came home, weary and burdened with the care of the churches. A loving wife, a devoted mother, a consistent Christian, she made friends wherever she went, and made the world better by having lived in it.

Her last illness was protracted, but she bore it with calm, Christian resignation. The last five days of her life were spent in a state of unconsciousness. Her dying testimony was her life; that is enough.

She was the mother of seven children, two of whom preceded her to the better land. The other five, and her devoted husband and a large circle of friends, mourn her loss; but they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Her remains were deposited in the grave-yard at Pleasant Hill, Jonesboro circuit, by the side of her dead children, there to rest until the resurrection morn.

T. P. ROBERTS.

MRS. CELIA ANN REYNOLDS, seventy-five years old, died April 10, 1875, in Mobile, Ala., at the residence of her son-in-law, J. M. Thomson.

This good woman had been a follower of Christ for sixty years. For fifty years she lived the faithful, happy wife of Joel Reynolds, who preceded her to heaven just three months and thirteen days. The deceased was a woman of mind and culture.

She was fond of writing. Her letters were racy and entertaining. Her religious faith was well defined. Her Christian experience was positive and happy, as her life was decided and uniform.

I became acquainted with Sister Reynolds and her husband in 1870, at their home near Bolton, Miss. She was then unable to attend church. She enjoyed in a high degree the visits of the preachers. She had derived great comfort, the previous year, from the pastoral attentions of Rev. C. G. Andrews. She loved to talk about religion. She loved to tell of the good times and the good preachers in Greensboro, Ala., where she resided from A. D. 1830 to 1850.

From the death of her husband she made her home principally with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Wallace, near Meridian, Miss. One evening, some two weeks before her death, while Mrs. Wallace and Tommie were singing a Christian song, Sister Reynolds became so full of joy that she shouted aloud the praise of God.

Her death was sudden. In the middle of the night she was waked by difficulty of breathing. All possible aid was afforded. In fifteen minutes she was dead. She had time, however, to shout a few distinct notes of Christian triumph. Her last audible words were a prayer she had often uttered, and which was fully answered: "Let me die the death of the righteous."

JOHN A. ELLIS.

DR. J. C. RICHARDSON, the subject of this notice, was born in Hall county, Ga., August 11, 1831. When he was five years old his father, John Richardson, moved to Greene county, Ala., where the doctor grew to manhood. While yet a young man he came to Louisiana. In 1857 he graduated at the medical college in New Orleans, at that time under the direction of the celebrated Dr. Stone. Soon after he commenced the practice of medicine in Ouachita parish, where, and in the adjoining parishes of Jackson and Union, he spent the remainder of his life.

On the sixteenth of June, 1861, he was united in marriage with Miss Martha Eula Vickers. This union proved to be a happy one, and thence their lives flowed in an even, smooth channel, without a single cloud or ripple, until March 25, 1875, when the winged messenger came suddenly, snapped the golden chain, and turned this happy Eden into the house of mourning. Alas! how unsubstantial is all earthly happiness. Heaven hath made it so, that we may learn to look up and desire things eternal.

On the fated day named above he and his partner were riding on the road, attending the sick, when a tree fell suddenly, and the doctor was caught under it and so badly hurt as to produce death in a few hours.

As a practitioner Dr. Richardson was very successful. His skill was not doubted. To his patients he was ever kind, and rarely ever left the sick-room without some word of cheer calculated to comfort all who were interested. As a friend you might confide in him; all was safe. Though a public man, many of his most shining qualities were only known to his most intimate associates. His family loved him very dearly. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the time of his death, and in the midst of arduous duties he found time to read his Bible and pray. He was a firm supporter of the church to the extent of his ability. He made it a point never to charge ministers who were engaged in the regular work.

I made the acquaintance of Dr. Richardson in Downsville, La., during my first year on the Ouachita circuit. Our acquaintance soon ripened into friendship. I learned to respect and love him, as most of the community in which he lived did. This is a dark providence; but God is in the cloud as well as in the pillar of fire, and doubtless it will yet become bright and luminous even to the grief-stricken widow, for God is able to make all grace abound, and faith can and will see light after awhile.

R. T. PARISH.

SUSAN E. SMITH, wife of J. M. Smith, and daughter of James and Lucy Kirby, was born in Spartanburg district, S. C., December 27, 1832, and died in Calhoun county, Ala., March 23, 1875.

She was married to her now bereaved companion November 16, 1849. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Zion church, in South Carolina, in the year 1846. She was not satisfied with her experience of grace at first, but by devotion and fervent prayer all doubts and fears as to her acceptance and change of heart were dispelled, and were succeeded by the most implicit faith, and she experienced the truth: "We know that we have passed from death unto life." In the year 1849 she moved with her husband and parents to Alabama, and they settled in the county where she died.

She joined the church at Union, and was a faithful and devout member until she joined the triumphant church in glory. She was a model woman in all the relations of life, and adorned her profession by being holy in all things. She was a constant sufferer from May, 1873, till released by death from all the ills and afflictions of mortal life. Surely, if it be possible for a mortal to be made perfect through suffering, she was. I have never witnessed such patience and meekness as she manifested during her afflictions. Oftentimes, while her body was racked with pains almost intolerable, her soul was filled with the love of God, and she would shout and praise the Lord. She realized most fully the truths attested by Paul: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

"Oh, death! where is thy sting?
Oh, grave! where is thy victory?"

Thus she lived, suffered and died.

R. G. RAGAN.

DIED, at the residence of his brother-in-law, Mr. Theodore Hailer, in Natchitoches, La., February 14, 1875, JOHN T. PORTER, in the twenty-sixth year of his age.

The deceased was the eldest living of four brothers, whose guide and counselor he became after the death of their father. A young man of energy and ability, of warm affections, though reserved in nature, he won many friends, and his sick-bed was surrounded by them and soothed by their ministrations. His first attack was pneumonia in violent form, from which, after eighteen days of severe and almost hopeless illness, he rallied, and was up and apparently well—better than for some time previous to his illness. After two or three days of health he was again stricken down by a severe chill, which terminated in unconsciousness and paralysis. A few hours and all was over, without a word of farewell or a look of recognition. Doubly hard is it to part with the loved ones thus; but those who loved him best are willing to trust their Father in the darkness as well as the light, for they rest in his love, and know he "does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." May he sanctify this latest sorrow, more than ever before, to the young brothers and the lonely sister, who have so often wept together over the open graves of their lost.

BRO. JOHN C. GOIN was born in Stewart county, Ga., October 13, 1850, and died of typhoid fever, at his residence near Abbeville, Miss., April 6, A. D. 1875, aged twenty-four years, five months and twenty-three days. Bro. Goin became a member of Abbeville Lodge, No. 320, A. F. and A. Masons, in October, 1873. Though young in years, he was proverbial for his regular and unremitted attendance upon the lodge, and ever manifested a cheerful willingness in the discharge of every duty imposed on him.

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his inscrutable providence, to remove from our midst our worthy brother, John C. Goin, a member and officer of Abbeville Lodge, No. 320; And whereas, We deem it meet and proper that we should give some suitable demonstrations of the sense of this lodge respecting the decease of our beloved brother; therefore,

Resolved, That we do most sincerely deplore the untimely death of Bro. Goin when just fairly entering upon a life promising more than ordinary usefulness.

Resolved, That we bow with humble submission under this dispensation of an all-wise Providence, assured that he doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we extend our most cordial sympathy to the family, and more especially to the grandfather, who has principally raised our deceased brother.

Resolved, That as a slight token of our grief the members wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Done by order of the lodge.

DIED, at her residence in Richland parish, La., on Saturday, March 20, 1875, Mrs. ANN ELIZA NOBLE, wife of Fleming Noble, aged sixty-two years. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for more than forty years. The writer knew her well for more than twenty years. She was noted for her piety and devotion to her church, and many a weary preacher has found her house a pleasant home. She was a kind wife, a faithful sister, a devoted mother and a sincere friend.

From the first hour that her trusting heart could confidently realize its adoption into God's family she lived as a citizen of a better world. The means of grace were privileges rather than duties, and the house of God was a delight. There she went "to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." She was ever watchful of the happiness and prosperity of her husband and children, and careful of their present comfort; but the chief solicitude was to secure their eternal inheritance, and lead them on to glory. Her faith was strong. She "staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief," but rested on them as living verities, and realized them in joyous anticipations.

She was stricken with paralysis, and lived but three hours afterward. Her sun of life went down so softly, leaving its brightness upon her evening sky, that you could scarcely realize for awhile that she was gone. "Be ye also ready." May the Lord comfort the hearts of her husband and children, relations and friends, and bring them all to heaven at last.

R. S. TRIPPETT.

MISS SALLIE E. GIBSON, second daughter of Thomas and Emily Gibson, was born December 18, 1858, in Russell county, Ala., and died in Lee county, Ala., February 7, 1875.

It is but seldom that we are called upon to record the death of a young lady who promised more to the church of which she was a member or to the community in which she lived. She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church South about two years since, under the ministry of Dr. J. S. Key, and from then to the day of her death she was an exemplary member of the same. She made it a rule to reprove sin in every shape, and to approve of what was right. To attend the sick and suffering was a duty that she always performed with great pleasure, which gave evidence of the fact that her spiritual attainments were in advance of her years. Her last illness was contracted while attending a sick relative in Columbus, Ga. The writer made her a visit just before her death, and found, as was expected, that she had made the necessary preparation and was submissive to the will of the Lord. Her last distinct utterances were about going home.

W. W. GRAHAM.

MRS. PRISCILLA HOLMES MOORE was born in Oglethorpe county, Ga., July 15, 1807. She was married in 1828, and moved to Caddo parish, La., in 1837, where she died of pneumonia, March 18, 1875.

Sister Moore was blessed with a deeply pious mother, and was the subject of converting grace and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church before her marriage. She lived for nearly fifty years a faithful and devoted Christian, raising her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. After a long and useful life she has gone to share the bliss of heaven with her two departed children, while the example of her saintly life remains to urge her two surviving children and her many friends onward to the skies.

HER PASTOR.

SHREVEPORT, LA., April 19, 1875.

M. A. PHILLIPS, whose maiden name was Love, was born in Calhoun county, Ala., May 29, 1836, and died in the triumph of faith on the ninth of September, 1874, in Carroll parish, La. She was married January 18, 1859, to P. M. Phillips, who preceded her only a few months to the home of the good.

She professed faith in Christ, and joined the M. E. Church South at Union, in Calhoun county, Ala., in the year 1848, and from this time she was a meek follower of the Lord Jesus till transferred to the church on high. She left her children among strangers, not knowing how they would get to her relatives in Alabama; but she trusted in the God of the orphan—that he would take care of them and be a father to them.

R. G. RAGAN.

MRS. HANNAH E. BUTTRICK died in Gretna, opposite New Orleans, February 8, 1875, aged eighty-four years. She was born in Boston, Mass.; moved to Madison, Ind., in 1815, and in 1839 she came to New Orleans. She was for many years a member of the Felicity Street church, and was a member of that charge at the time of her death. Sister Buttrick was a devoted and exemplary Christian. She loved her Savior, and did what she could for his cause. Although impoverished and alone in the world, she had many friends, and was affectionately cared for in her last illness. Her end was peaceful and triumphant.

LINUS PARKER.

LUCINDA C. WAMACK was born in a fort in the State of Alabama, in the year 1813, and died December 11, 1873. The subject of this notice joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1828, and lived a consistent member until her death. She was a great lover of the doctrines and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For the last few years of her life the word of God was her constant companion. She was a woman of great faith, and died without leaving an enemy. Lucinda leaves her connections and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

JOHN H. EVANS, P. C.

POLKVILLE, May 6, 1875.

Our Young People.

WHAT I LOVE BEST.

I love the blue sky,
Where pretty birds fly,
And morning's bright beauty as well;
I love the fresh air,
That blows without care,
And many more things I could tell.

I love the warm sun,
And busy bee's hum,
And walks up the grassy green hills;
I love the fair flowers,
And sunshining showers,
And water that comes from the rills.

I love the tall trees
That wave in the breeze,
And thistles and buttercups too;
I love open day,
And beautiful May,
And all that light brings to my view.

But something beside,
Quite close to my side,
More lovely and precious I call;
'Tis darling mamma,
And dear, good papa,
I love, and I love more than all.

But oh! there is One
More bright than the sun—
More passing fair than the rest;
'Tis Jesus, who shed
His blood in my stead;
Oh! should I not love him the best?

Children's Friend.

Gus.

Dear little Gus grew purer and more lovely every day. Each day something new was revealed in the precious boy to interest his parents. He was so thoughtful about saying his prayers, and, though but three years of age, he could repeat his better than his elder brother.

When grandma said grace he would bow his little head, close his eyes and afterward whisper: "Mamma, I've said mine too." He seemed to have a far-off expression in his sweet blue eye that warned us; his abiding-place was not here. The destiny of these dear little ones cannot be foreseen by mortal eyes, so his fond parents built hopes of a fair earthly career for their noble little boy, but could not see the tender blossom was ripening for eternity.

One night his mamma folded him away in his little bed, and kissed him "good-night," as usual. She was awakened in the night by the call: "Mamma, I'm cold." She raised up, took him in with her, and pressed him close to her breast, for he seemed chilled. Soon after she discovered he had fever, and it increased until morning. The bright Sabbath morning found this cherub boy very ill. He got up, but said in his innocent way: "Mamma, I hardly can't walk." Then his mamma had to support him to prevent him from falling. His father became alarmed at his condition and went for a physician. He had not been gone long when the dear child was seized with spasms. The frightened mother called in vain for assistance (for they lived in the country several miles from any neighbors) until he was recovering from the third, when she succeeded in getting a boy to post for his father and the doctor to hurry on. All day they watched for the return of reason. Late in the afternoon he became conscious. Then began that pitying longing for water, "Mamma, give me water," ever and anon, until just before sunrise next morning our heavenly Father called him to drink of the water of life.

It was a sad bereavement to give him up; but his mamma has the sweet consolation in her sorrow that she taught him to love her Savior, who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Perchance the love for dear little Gus will steal away many of his father's thoughts, and lead him to embrace the Savior's love. May his two brothers, who loved him so much, grow to be good and useful men, and meet him "beyond the river."

"Close the door softly,
Bridle the breath;
Our little earth angel
Is talking with death.
Gently he woos him;
He asks not to stay;
His arms are about him;
He bears him away.

"Smooth out the ringlets,
Close the blue eye;
No wonder such beauty
Was claimed in the sky.
Bear him out gently,
This idol of ours;
Let his grave slumbers
Be 'mid sweet flowers."

From Our Young Friends.

LIVE OAK WOLD, April 27, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I like to read the little letters in the "Child's Corner;" and after reading "Florence's" letter I thought I would write to you. We have plenty of toads and frogs here, but we don't know what a "bays' nest" is. If Grandpa Goodale is ever going to tell us I wish he would please hurry about it. My ma says she thinks it is a bee-hive, and if it is I am sure poor Barney had a lively time of it when he milked one. My pa says he is not at all fond of milking "bays' nests." We have a Sunday school. Mr. Henry P. Bowen is our pastor, and we all love him very much. He has been very sick, but he is better now. If there is room enough in the "Child's Corner" for me may be I will write again.

Very truly yours,

ALICE CARY SADLER.

PORT HUDSON, LA., May 6, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My pa takes the ADVOCATE. I am a constant reader of it, and look forward to Sunday with great pleasure, for then I get to read the nice letters from our preachers and our little friends, besides other reading that is very interesting to me. I have often thought I would write to your paper, but I never had the courage until I saw that so many little boys and girls were writing letters. I am thirteen years old. I am making a crop this year, and if I succeed well intend to help the missionaries some. I have been attending the Presbyterian Sunday school, but we are to meet next Sunday to organize one at the Methodist church—Pipkin's chapel. I love the Sunday school very much; attended it regularly last year while at school in Jackson, and received a beautiful prize from my Sunday school teacher, Miss Annie Jones—the words "Remember thy Creator" in beautiful letters, nicely framed.

Your little friend,

WALTER LIPSCOMB.

Hard Knots.

The spot wouldn't come out. The more they rubbed it the blacker it grew, and at last they had to give it up in despair. It was too bad. Mamma told them not to touch it, and they didn't mean to disobey; but Susy asked Katy to let her hold it in her hands a minute, and Katy forgot what mamma said.

"O dear!" said Katy, "mamma told me if I disobeyed in any way to-day I couldn't go to grandma's to-morrow to spend the day; and now I have got to stay at home, and I've got to go and tell mother besides."

"'Tis too bad!" said the girls. "I wouldn't tell," said Mary Rice; "let us go and wash it off, and she never need know."

"But that wouldn't be right," said Katy, "for I really did take it down."

"Well, of course your mother didn't mean you mustn't touch it; she only meant you mustn't hurt it," said Mary.

Poor Katy! She didn't feel as if that was just what mamma meant; but she did want to go to grandma's so much that she thought she would just wash it off first, and then tell mamma afterward. She did not see then that this was what Tom Gillies called "tying one of satan's knots" in her life, which always have to be untied by confession and forgiveness before the heart can be free and happy again. So they all ran out in the kitchen, and rubbed the little statue with water and soap till it was streaked all over.

"O dear!" said Katy again; "I feel as if I couldn't tell mother."

"Hide it," said Susy, "and she will never know. I guess I can turn it round so the mark won't show."

So they ran back again and put it on its shelf, and put a vase in front of it, and all went into the garden to play.

Katy forgot her Bible verse that mamma had explained so carefully: "He that covereth his sin shall not prosper;" and she tied another of "satan's knots," and a very hard one too. Her heart was heavy all the afternoon, and not all the nice plays of her companions could make her forget that she was hiding something from her dear, kind mamma. She couldn't bear to go in to supper, and when mamma kissed her good-night, and said: "Has my little girl been good all day?" she thought at first she must tell; but she said, "Yes, mamma," and so tied another "knot," and the worst one of all—a lie.

She ran away to bed; but she remembered her verse now, and what Tom had said about satan's making a harder knot each time we do wrong, and she remembered how bravely Tom untied his knots by confessing.

Katy began to think she must tell the truth, and untie her knots too, and have a happy heart again. So she called mamma to her, and told her about it. And though mamma was very sorry Katy had done wrong, and sorry she would have to stay at home from grandma's, she was glad to forgive her little daughter, and explain again to her God's word, that "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but he that confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy."—Child's Paper.

SLEIGH BELLS.—How many boys and girls know how sleigh bells are made? How do you think the little iron ball gets inside the bell? It is too big to be put in through the holes in the bell, and yet it is inside. How did it get there?

This little iron ball is called "the jinglet." When you shake the sleigh bell it jingles. When the horse trots the bells jingle, jingle, jingle. In making the bell, this jinglet is put inside a little ball of mud, just the shape of the inside of the bell. Then a mold is made just the shape of the outside of the bell. This mud ball, with the jinglet inside, is placed in the mold of the outside, and the melted metal is poured in, which fills up the space between the mud ball and the mold.

When the mold is taken off you see a sleigh bell, but it will not ring, as it is full of dirt. The hot metal dries the dirt that the ball is made of, so it can be all shaken out. After the dirt is all shaken out of the holes in the bell, the little iron jinglet will still be in the bell, and it will ring all right.

It took a good many years to think out how to make a sleigh bell.—Congregationalist.

SINCE the gospel began to be published, we doubt if it has ever been preached more in harmony with its comprehensive spirit and its generous provisions than at the present time, and it is a matter for congratulation that, amid the unhappy controversies which prevail on points of church polity, there never was a more unanimous agreement in the presentation of the vital doctrine of the atonement.—Dr. John Hall.

THE REAL AND THE IDEAL.

Not nobler are the hearts that work than hearts that only dream;
For real as the things that are are all the things that seem.

The waters gleam among the hills, the mirage on the sands,
And yet alike both image forth the self-same Maker's hands.

We sail along a rocky shore—the cliffs are grave and green,
While in the south depths below as lofty cliffs are seen.

We float upon the waves of life, with death at either hand,
And what is false and what is true we may not understand.

We see the shadowy rocks beneath, we see the crags above—
How happy are the hearts that know the name of both is Love!

The American Cardinal.

The Roman Catholics have inaugurated their cardinal with all the pomp of ceremonial which their ecclesiastics know so well how to use. There are none who better understand the art of getting up an imposing spectacle than those who manage these affairs in the Roman Catholic Church. They have made it a special study, and have brought it to a high perfection. The elevation of Cardinal McCloskey gave them an opportunity to do their best in this line; the wish to make a grand impression upon the American people furnished them with a motive. We must admit that no grander ecclesiastical show was ever offered in this country.

The occasion could not fail to attract a good measure of attention and interest. The Roman Catholic population of this city is very large, and that of the whole country is not insignificant. Citizens of that faith felt that the highest honor in the power of man to give had been conferred upon their body and upon the country of their home. They all had a whole-souled personal interest in the affair. Most of them probably thought it was the most important event that had ever taken place in the United States. The public also participated, after a fashion, in this interest. New York will turn out in crowds to see any show, even the smallest—a Masonic funeral, or a man on the street selling a new tooth-wash. Here was the largest show that had ever been brought to the city. A new species was to be created in the United States—a cardinal, such as they had in Europe, but the like of which had never been seen here before; a man who was to be dressed up in red, was to ride in a carriage with red wheels, with a real noble's coat of arms upon it; who would be a prince, and have a hand in making popes. The ceremony was to be participated in by all the bishops in the country, with no end of priests, dressed in bright robes, with all kinds of displays of lights and staffs and exquisite music. There happened to be nothing else going on at the time to engage the curiosity-hunters. The event and the ceremonial took place under the most favorable combination of circumstances that could be asked for.

Our Roman Catholic friends have failed to realize the results which they anticipated from the great effort they made. Their exhibition has made no permanent impression. Now that we look back at it, it seems to have made only an insignificant transient impression—hardly more than any unusual event will give. There was no pressure of matter upon the newspapers, yet they paid comparatively little attention to it. As far as the general public is concerned, the common expression is that it "fell flat." The day after the investiture was made, and the descriptions of it in the morning papers had been read, the public was ready to forget all about it, and to begin to speculate as to what the next curiosity would be.

Whatever the Roman Catholics may think, or try to make the world believe, the creation of a cardinal in the United States is an affair of no public importance. Within their own church it may be one of momentous interest, as it ought to be; outside, it is nothing more to deserve attention than the ordination of a Protestant Episcopal or a Methodist bishop, or the installation of a grand master of the Masonic order. It is clear that all that our people cared about it was to see how the new thing would look. The spectacle being one of unusual grandeur, those who saw it enjoyed it hugely, as they would have enjoyed as good a spectacle on the stage of a theater.

Yet the fact of the appointment of a cardinal is one of some real importance. The functions of his office are not imaginary. In some States they are sources of power. Even in the United States Cardinal McCloskey will be held by the people whose patriarch he is in a degree of reverence which Protestants can hardly appreciate. In most European States such an appointment may become an occasion of commotion, of diplomatic negotiation, perhaps of war. The nomination of Ledowchowski in Posen is regarded as an affair of national significance to the German empire, and the government is ready to exert all its power, if necessary, to prevent its taking effect. In the case of some other States the Pope would ask the consent of the sovereign, and the sovereign would offer his suggestions or express his concurrence; and representatives of the government would figure prominently in their official capacity at the consecration. But when President Grant was invited to attend the ceremony here we all felt that, if anything more was intended than a complimentary courtesy, the managers of the affair had done something very ridiculous. Even in England a degree of interest is shown in reference to the appointment of Cardinal Manning quite different from the careless curiosity which we Americans have evinced.

We owe our freedom from concern in affairs of this character to the complete disconnection of Church and State in our country. The Roman Catholic or any other church may build as many churches, may commission as many priests, bishops, archbishops and cardinals as it pleases, may even bring over the Pope, so that it does not intringe upon our government; and we mean to take care that it shall never do that. In Europe either the church is under the care of the government, or the government is under the care of the church. Whatever one does affects some right or interest of the other. On many points of policy neither can adopt any measure without consulting the other. In the United States, as a rule, whatever the Church or State may do within its legitimate sphere is a matter of mutual indifference.

An attempt has been made to cause the American cardinalate to seem a national affair. It was absurd in the beginning, and has met the failure it deserved. The appointment has been spoken of as an honor conferred upon this country. The honor has been conferred upon the Roman Catholics of the country by their head master. They think much of it, and we are willing they should. As to the people of the United States, as such, it is none of theirs, and they wish none of it.

In some respects we are sorry for Cardinal McCloskey. He will find his honors to be in our country something like a white elephant. He will hardly seek to be called a prince, or "his eminence;" a cardinal's carriage in full style will have an unenviable conspicuity on the streets; as a solitary inhabitant of the continent in a cardinal's suit he can never be anything but a guy.

The appointment will not be attended with any of the political dangers that many apprehend. The new cardinal has already found one of his leading spheres of duty to be performing the marriage ceremony for couples ambitious to have their names associated with his. His influence will be confined to the members of his own church. This church is of foreign growth entirely. It will never be stronger here than it is now. As the Irish immigration falls off, and the original generation of immigrants passes away, its power will wane, and it will cease to be a subject of dread. A cardinal will not be able to help it.—Methodist.

Three Great Artists.

Three great men in Italy stood highest in the ranks of art at the highest time of her seeming greatness; closely connected in experience, widely separated in individual character, each showing in various degrees the extraordinary gifts which, in some form, have never died out from the Italian race—all equally affected by the manners and policy of the age, all "mighty men." These three were Leonardo da Vinci, Michael Angelo and Raphael. To be a great artist was by that time a passport both to employment and to popularity. The world had then begun to seek them for themselves as well as for their art. Society had reached that intellectual point when genius is not only patronized, but honored. No one of these three great men was bound by convent rules or fettered by partnerships; each stood individually and alone, though drawing numbers round himself. The outline of their characters, therefore, is lost in no common ground; and no thread of history is more trustworthy to follow than the lives and fates of such men. Two of them, Leonardo and Michael Angelo, were before and beyond their age—the one intellectually, the other morally; while Raphael in both respects stood on a par with it. Leonardo and Raphael were men of the world, supple, courtier-like, swimming with the stream; Michael Angelo was stern and upright, and always in conflict with it. Leonardo was the greater genius; Michael Angelo the nobler spirit; Raphael the happier man. Of one so sympathetic and successful as Raphael it is difficult to give a telling outline. Misfortune did not try him, success did not spoil him, length of life did not weary him; accordingly the course of the man and the painter presents that smoothness on which the moralist can lay little hold. Leonardo's gifts were so incredibly numerous and varied as to hinder the development of his career in any one of them; he was also fastidious, procrastinating and apparently unconscientious; and never was so lofty a fame in art maintained by works so few, so ruined and so uncertain as those he has left behind him. Michael Angelo was the impersonation of laboriousness and conscientiousness, but his time and his genius were wasted by the authority of ignorance and caprice; and it was only by the perseverance of an honest purpose, the energy of a great mind and the opportunity of a long life that he accomplished the stupendous monuments that immortalize him. As to Raphael, the number of his creations, as compared with the shortness of his career, are such as lead us to infer that equal facility and perfection of production were never compatible before or since. Leonardo worked slowly; Michael Angelo furiously; of Raphael's mode of labor we can only be sure that it was a delight to him. In character of art Leonardo and Michael Angelo were both strictly new; Raphael not so new as so perfect. Finally, their portraits are the types of the men. Leonardo, handsome and high-bred, with an Italian's dignity, but a courtier's mask; Raphael, young, beautiful and unruffled; Michael Angelo's the mournfulest countenance we can look upon.—Edinburg Review.

THE first years of every man's business or professional life are years of education. They are intended to be, in the order of nature and Providence. Doors do not open to a man until he is prepared to enter them. The man without a wedding garment may get in surreptitiously, but he immediately goes out with a flea in his ear. We think it is the experience of most successful men who have watched the course of their lives in retrospect that whenever they have arrived at a point where they were thoroughly prepared to go up higher, the door to a higher place has swung back of itself, and they have heard the call to enter. The old die, or voluntarily retire for rest. The best men who stand ready to take their places will succeed to their position, and its honors and emoluments.—Dr. Holland.

Drugging Liquor.

A farmer adds a little sand to his timothy seed. He injures no one's life; he only cheats a dealer out of four or five dollars. The State employs him at hard labor for ten years. What shall be done with the creatures that poison our sons? In 1866 four houses in New York city palmed off two millions of gallons of these deadly compounds. They buy the meanest whisky or spoiled cider, and "drug" it into the rarest wines in a few hours. It not unfrequently happens that a country seller drives in a few barrels of his spoiled stop, sells it to a manufacturer, does his shopping and in a few hours drives back with a part of the same stuff "drugged" into wine or brandy, for which he paid an advance of four or five gallons. A Frenchman, pointing to a barrel, said: "Tell me what kind of wine or brandy you want, and give me three hours, and I will draw it out of that barrel."

The more costly the liquor the more certain the fraud. The whole champagne district is only twenty thousand acres, and produces only about 800,000 baskets per annum. Of this Russia consumes 160,000 baskets, France 162,000, England 220,000, Germany 146,000, leaving for America and the rest of the world only 112,000. Yet Yankees consume more than 1,000,000 baskets yearly. How dull it is in England and Germany, and France and Russia to imagine that they get any champagne when they consume twenty-five per cent. more than is produced.

Only 30,000 barrels of wine are produced on the Island of Madeira. America buys 50,000 barrels and the rest of the world has a full share.

Port wine is manufactured in Douro valley, in Portugal. The valley is narrow and only sixty miles long. Yet all the world drinks from these vineyards. London alone drinks more than twice as much port wine as is produced, both good and bad. There is consumed annually more than one hundred times as much as is produced. Follow a gallon of pure juice from the press on the banks of the Douro. In the warehouse in Oporto, by the aid of beet whisky, elderberry juice and water it is made into five gallons. In the London Dock warehouse, by the aid of potato whisky, red saunders, and the like, it swells up into twenty gallons. In New York it takes a dose of strychnine, belladonna and spoiled cider, and puffs up into thirty gallons. In the wholesale house in Chicago bad whisky, stramonium and drugs enlarge it to forty gallons. In the retailer's back room it gets another dose and comes out eighty gallons. We receive one drop in eighty, and that is twenty-five per cent. better than the average.

MACAULAY.—It was not until Macaulay stood up that I was aware of all the vulgarity and ungainliness of his appearance; not a ray of intellect beams from his countenance; a lump of more ordinary clay never inclosed a powerful mind and lively imagination. He had a cold and a sore throat, the latter of which occasioned a constant contraction of the muscles of the thorax, making him appear as if in momentary danger of a fit. His manner struck me as not pleasing, but it was not assuming; unembarrassed, yet not easy; unpolished, yet not coarse; there was no kind of usurpation of the conversation, no tenacity as to opinions or facts, no assumption of superiority, but the variety and extent of his information were soon apparent, for whatever subject was touched upon he evinced the utmost familiarity with it; quotation, illustration, anecdote, seemed ready in his hands for every topic. * * * Macaulay is a most extraordinary man, and his astonishing knowledge is every moment exhibited, but (as far as I have yet seen of him, which is not sufficient to judge) he is not agreeable. His propositions and his allusions are rather too abrupt; he starts topics not altogether naturally; then he has none of the graces of conversation, none of that exquisite tact and refinement which are the result of a felicitous intuition or a long acquaintance with good society, or more probably a mixture of both. * * * Sydney Smith calls Macaulay "a book in breeches."—Greville's Memories.

VERBAL VICES.—Indulgence in verbal vice soon encourages corresponding vices in conduct. Let any one of you come to talk about any mean or vile practice with a familiar tone, and do you suppose, when the opportunity occurs for committing the mean or vile act, he will be as strong against it as before? It is by no means an unknown thing that men of correct lives talk themselves into crime, into sensuality, into perdition. Bad language easily runs into bad deeds. Select any iniquity you please; suffer yourself to converse in its dialect, to use its slang, to speak in the character of one who relishes it, and I need not tell how soon your moral sense will lower down to its level. Becoming intimate with it, you lose your horror of it. To be too much with bad men and in bad places is not only unwholesome to a man's morality, but unfavorable to his faith and trust in God. It is not every man who could live as Lot did in Sodom, and then be fit to go out of it under God's convoy. This obvious principle of itself furnishes a reason not only for watching the tongue, but for keeping ourselves as much as possible out of the company of bad associates.—Indian Arcana.

A LITTLE five-year-old boy in Indiana said to a judge who had called at his father's: "Are you going to your store?" "I haven't got any store." "Are you going to your mill?" "I haven't got any mill." "Are you going to your shop?" "I haven't got any shop." "Well, then, how do you make money?" "I make it by my brains." "Well, my papa makes money, and he hasn't got any brains."

A KANSAS editor accuses another of "plagueyism." The spelling school mania has not yet reached Kansas.

Religious Intelligence.

A NEW church building has been erected by the Church Missionary Society at Jerusalem, and has been placed under the charge of a native pastor.

TRINITY Episcopal church, in Boston, is to cost $750,000. The lecture-room is now finished, and the main structure is progressing rapidly. It will be one of the most magnificent churches in this country.

WORD comes from Vienna that the Turks have murdered two hundred and seventy Christians in Roumania and Bulgaria during the last three months, and that the names of the victims have been communicated to the foreign representatives in Constantinople.

MISS FIELDE, a missionary, thus describes the administration of the communion in a large city in the interior of the land of the Celestials: "The chapel is in the midst of the city, and on Sundays the Christians, who chiefly live in the villages, come in, some from ten miles away, to the service, each bringing a little basket or packet of rice to cook for his noon meal. Last Sunday there were sixty at the morning service, and thirty-six partook of the communion. Two of the brethren were under discipline for having helped to carry the appliances of a theater connected with idol worship; and, though they confessed their sin, they were required to abstain from the sacrament for two months. The native pastor, Hu Sin-sey, is doing valuable work here, and there is real growth in morality and piety in the church members."

DESCRIBING the preachers at the recent New England Methodist Conference at Springfield, one of the local papers says: "Most of them had sturdy frames and ruddy faces, which betokened good constitutions and temperate lives, backed up by itinerant habits and camp meeting discipline. The brethren were also characterized by great depth of lung, so that hardly a weak voice was noticed in all the deliberations, and, as the accompaniment of singing was well-nigh universal among them, the singing of the hymns was perhaps the most peculiarly denominational feature of the gathering. The Conference was by no means idle, but held ten business meetings, nine anniversaries, eight prayer meetings, one sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and one love-feast, and listened to five sermons, during its session." Among other business matters the Conference passed resolutions against any change in the Massachusetts tax laws that would leave the churches subject to assessment. After considerable sharp discussion, a motion passed requesting the Bishops not to transfer preachers to that Conference if present members were to be displaced thereby. Strict temperance resolutions were adopted.—Christian Union.

IRISH CHURCH PROPERTY.—The Irish Church commissioners have published their accounts. From these we learn that no little of the money that was expected from the disendowment of the Irish Church has gone and cannot be recovered. A large sum has been applied by way of the value of livings upon a remarkably liberal scale. The commissioners have settled with all the dignitaries, about one thousand five hundred incumbents, and nine hundred and seventy curates. The archbishops, bishops and incumbents have taken £5,818,262 2s. 1d.; the permanent curates received the award of £1,730,781 14s. 4d.; and clerks, sextons, diocesan schoolmasters, vicars general etc., swell the total to £8,000,743 18s. 10d. Then the officers of the late ecclesiastical commission have received £28,246 19s. 1d.; the commutation of the Regium Donum cost £615,346 14s. 2d.; of Maynooth, £372,331 6d.; of lay patronages, £39,254 2s. 11d.; while private endowments swallowed £501,040. A few items more, which need not be particularized, and the commutations and compensations amount in all to £10,367,504 6s. 4d. If the expenses do not increase and the lands and tithes sell well, there will still be about five millions balance to be applied to national purposes. This is less by nearly three millions than was originally anticipated.

MISSIONARY NOTES.—In the Waldensian missions in the valleys of Piedmont there are 16 parishes, containing 13,183 Protestants, 145 common schools, 4,400 scholars, 41 Sunday schools, with 1,905 scholars. In other portions of Italy there are 33 organized churches, 13 missionary stations, and 30 places occasionally visited. Their missions extend to Sicily and the Island of Elba, and embrace an Italian colony at Alexandria, in Egypt. The work is attended with great difficulties and sacrifices, and in many instances with much suffering, but the missionaries display great endurance and heroism.——The Moravian mission in Labrador is prospering, under great difficulties, but the Moravians know no discouragement or failure. They are remarkable for their missionary zeal.——In Burmah, where God has wrought such wonders in the conversion of the Karens, the good work is still progressing, and several conversions of more than ordinary interest have taken place.——The Spirit is poured out on the mission work in China in a most remarkable manner. At Canton the Presbyterian mission is receiving large additions. Throughout China, at all the missionary stations, the divine blessing rests richly on the people.——A missionary of Ooroomiah, Persia, says: "Almost every day we hear of some new and interesting case among Mussulmans. There is a growing earnestness for times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, among both missionaries and native Christians."——In Syria a good work is progressing among the Mohammedans, a number of whom have professed faith in Christ.——Islamism has taken alarm at the advance of Protestant Christianity. The schools are teaching over 2,000 pupils, and the gospel is preached in 59 different places, and the laborers from this country, male and female, number 31, besides 100 native assistants.—Zion's Herald.

The Three Preachers.

Paul, Apollos, Cephas. These men were eminent, especially in the Corinthian Church. They had gifts differing, and each was great in his way. Paul was the planter, the foundation-layer. He was learned, logical, metaphysical and speculative. But he was also practical—entered into new fields, did the rough work of pioneering, and took hold on the lower classes of society as well as the cultivated and refined. He must have been a preacher of great power, and with sufficient flexibility and variety to entertain, instruct and awaken very diverse sorts of people. He was tremendously in earnest, full of tenderness and sympathy, and intent on winning souls. His bodily presence, however, was said to be weak, and his speech contemptible. This was the declaration of certain Corinthians. They admitted that his letters were weighty and powerful, but we suspect there must have been some foundation for the harsh criticism passed upon his presence and speech. His manner and elocution were not agreeable probably, and his person may have been diminutive and without much grace.

Apollos stands in strong contrast to Paul. He came from a city of great culture, and was doubtless a man of literary attainments. He was "an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures." He was a waterer, even as Paul was a planter. He was an accomplished orator—a graceful speaker, with a voice perfectly modulated, and of great compass and sweetness. His person was the perfection of manly beauty and strength, his mind was disciplined by study, his descriptive powers were extraordinary, his imagination brilliant, and he possessed a temperament of wonderful magnetism. He was a master in the art of convincing and of persuading. He was "fervent in the Spirit," enthusiastic in his convictions, and most hearty and emotional in his religious experience. He was a man of humility, docile and teachable, as we may learn from the fact that after he began his Christian career at Ephesus he submitted to the guidance of Aquila and Priscilla, who took him "and expounded unto him the word of God more perfectly." His was a great but simple mind, and much like that of George Whitefield. He was not an organizer, not expert in administrative affairs, and not particularly profound in his conceptions. But he had the gift of eloquence. His speech distilled "as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." It dropped upon his hearers. They waited for him "as for the rain, and they opened their mouth wide as for the latter rain." Says Paul: "I have planted; Apollos watered." The sermons of Apollos, coming after Paul's thorough indoctrination, and things hard to be understood, and after his right discipline, were as refreshing as a breeze in summer, and as inspiriting as a shower in time of drouth. The manner of his preaching, his voice, style, were utterly different, and to the most more pleasing.

Cephas completes the triumvirate. Not scholarly and profound as Paul, not polished and graceful as Apollos, he was ever rugged, forceful and direct. We may say of him, as some one has said of Krummacher, that he preached like a lion. He was a plain, blunt man, his native qualities not stamped out by grace nor obliterated by inspiration, but purified, exalted and transfigured by the Spirit that dwelt within him. His sermons, fragments of which we have in the Acts, were hot and massive, and he seems to have poured out his words as the volcano pours out red rivers of lava. He was bold and stern, without art, and careless of the embellishments of rhetoric. His style was plain, straightforward, strong. Paul's involved sentences and superhuman reaches of thought were not much to his taste. Certainly he was too natural and too much himself to affect the pathos and polish of the preacher from the schools of Alexandria.

These three men made their mark upon the Corinthian Church. Their powerful ministries had been felt there. Comparisons were inevitable; each had his special admirers. There were dissensions, and then divisions and parties. Some were of Paul some of Apollos and some of Cephas. The grounds of preference or of dislike were probably personal; and based upon the mere manner and style of the men. The disagreement between Peter and Paul, which reached its crisis and cure at Antioch, seems to have had nothing to do with the pulpit critics of Corinth. There is no intimation that Apollos had become tainted with the speculation of Philo and the Gnostics. Some liked the deep and analytical Paul in spite of his contemptible presence and awkward manner. Some delighted most in the sunny spirit and stirring eloquence of Apollos, and some rejoiced more in the brusque ways and tornado-like utterances of Peter. These good men had no intentional agency in awakening contention about themselves. There were no petty jealousies among them, no envy, no wicked ambition. They preached Christ, each in his own way, and with such gifts as God had given.

The people contended because they were carnal, narrow in their views, and profoundly selfish even in their religion. "For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?" They were "puffed up for one against another." They thought of men "above that which is written," and evidently thought too little of Christ. They could not appropriate this complete ministry and make it all their own. By their partiality, prejudices, and the disposition to glory in men, they lost the blessings which differing gifts might have conferred. "Whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas, all are yours." All were called of God and sent to edify the church, and it took them all to make a perfect ministry. Each man was the favorite of somebody; possibly there were a few elect spirits who loved and appreciated all of them. If such there were, we may be sure their religion was not rooted in any man, neither was their faith bound up in any man. "So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." God is to be worshiped, Christ is the foundation, and the ministry, with its varied endowments, is the instrument.

Paul, Apollos and Cephas are types of the Christian ministry of to-day. The carnality of the Corinthians is still in the church. The primitive itinerancy developed this kind of friction, and it is still manifested. Notwithstanding, what a rich possession has the church in the variety and manifold gifts of her preachers! "Whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas, or the world or life or death, or things present or things to come, all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

The Sunday School.

This feature of religious work and activity has reached a high point of development. As a rule, every congregation in the towns and cities has its Sunday school. The good being done is doubtless great. Opportunity for usefulness is given to Christian men and women, and the door opened to them is both agreeable and beneficial to themselves. One of the arguments for the institution is the fact that it gives religious people something to do. The most of those engaged in it would probably do nothing of consequence if this did not exist. Devoted superintendents and teachers have here a rich field in which to sow and reap, and in proportion to their faithfulness and diligence will they be blessed in the enlargement of their own knowledge of the Bible, and in the increase of spirituality in their own souls.

The adult Bible class should be in every school, and in a large room where every member of the church, not engaged in teaching, can be profitably engaged in studying the Scriptures. This would constitute an excellent normal class, from which teachers could be drawn as they are needed.

A good superintendent is even more rare than a good class leader or a good preacher. He must have grace and gifts, and a certain amount and kind of enthusiasm for the work. He must be called of God, and the call recognized by the church through its pastors and representatives. Next to the pastor, he is most responsible for souls, and he has an account to give which should incite him to watchfulness and prayer. If the imposition of hands or any other impressive induction into office would increase the sense of responsibility, we should not object to its adoption. We cannot commit our children to the care of men who are appointed in a haphazard way. We want men of deep piety, of intelligence and wisdom in this position.

Faithful and competent teachers are next to a capable superintendent in importance, and a good superintendent will have no other sort if he can help it. The teacher is in more intimate relation to the children than any one else except the parents. The character, the religious convictions, knowledge of doctrine and experience, and the morals of the children, are very much in the hands of the teacher. Teachers should be devoted, spiritually-minded Christians, thoroughly acquainted with the Bible, and deeply experienced in the things of God. Their example will have its influence. If not religious themselves, and not members of the church, we do not see how they can be intrusted with the spiritual instruction of our children. They are themselves without Christ, and their lives point not to but from him. Our superintendents and pastors should exercise care and vigilance in the appointment of teachers. Better have fewer, or even none, than to have those who are destitute of experimental religion.

A close inspection of some classes in a large school, and perhaps also of some entire schools, will reveal the meagerness of the instruction imparted. In some cases the children are taught almost nothing, and in others what is imparted is fragmentary and far from embracing the essential doctrines of the gospel. The lessons should be selected for the school by capable hands, for the reason that the most of our teachers are not qualified to do it. We care nothing about uniform lessons as such, but to have them prepared, with notes and expositions by an accomplished scholar, is of the very highest utility. Dr. Haygood's lessons and notes are the best we know of, and our schools should use them by all means. To the average teacher they are not only helpful, but they cannot well be dispensed with. In all of our schools there should be a regular and thorough course of catechetical instruction. Part of the time can be devoted to this, and the school publicly examined, at the same time that the uniform lessons are attended to. Every other church has its catechisms, with its distinctive doctrines plainly set forth. If we would have our children thoroughly indoctrinated we must return to our catechisms.

One important object of the Sunday school is the instruction and salvation of children who have no religious training at home. The children of religious parents, who are properly cared for at home and attend preaching regularly, might do very well without the Sunday school. While a good school is a great blessing to them, it is not so necessary as in the case of those who are deprived of pious home influences and discipline. In estimating the actual results of Sunday school work we look especially at what is being done for the children outside of the church. The Sunday school is helpful to the children of the church, but it is by no means the chief nor the essential instrument in bringing them to Christ. It is to the children of prayerless parents, reared without a home altar, and in ignorance of the gospel, that the Sunday school is the greatest boon. The mission of the Sunday school is eminently to this class of children. A school is not doing its whole work, nor its most important work, if it is not bringing these neglected unfortunates to the knowledge of the truth. It is the children out of the church—those who are utterly neglected and ignorant—that our schools should especially seek out and bring into their inclosure.

Here we meet the hardest and most neglected part of Sunday school work. Our schools are composed almost entirely of our own children, while comparatively few of those who most need them are brought within their pale. We would call attention to this feature of the Sunday school enterprise. To hunt up and bring in these unfolded and unsheltered lambs is a work of vigilance, self-denial, courage and toil. Superintendents, teachers and pastors must give their personal attention and time to it, and realize that this is by far the most important part of their labor. In our large cities mission schools located in neglected but populous quarters, and established for the special benefit of the poor and illiterate, are of inestimable benefit. Every strong and live church, besides its own home school, ought to plant and maintain a mission school, or to unite with other charges in its support. The greatest work of the Sunday school lies in this direction, and its grandest results are to be attained by entering this field of self-denying labor.

A general complaint in connection with the Sunday schools is that the children are kept from preaching by the services of the school. We hear this more or less from all quarters of the church. If it be true that a considerable portion of the children is by this means led to neglect the preaching of the gospel, it is a most serious complaint. Here in New Orleans the larger children and all the teachers usually stay to church. Elsewhere it may be otherwise. If it is a choice between the Sunday school and the preaching, we should not hesitate about the course to take. A good sermon and the worship of the congregation are worth more to our children than anything they can learn in an hour's time in the best of Sunday schools. But there need be, and there should be, no conflict. Let the Sunday school session be short, and dismissed in good time, and let teachers, superintendents and pastors do their duty, and there will be no trouble. On the contrary, if properly managed, the Sunday school will help to swell the congregations, and contribute to the profitable hearing of the word.

Old Bibles.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of April 29 is a very interesting letter on Sunday schools by Daniel Webster. In the letter Mr. Webster speaks of spending a Sabbath, many years ago, with Thomas Jefferson, at his residence in Virginia. They discussed the beauties of the Bible, and Mr. Webster says: "I then turned to Jeremiah (there was a fine folio of the Scriptures before me of 1458,) and I read," etc. I raise the point, and question the assertion of there being a Bible at Mr. Jefferson's house, or anywhere else, bearing the date of 1458. The first important specimen of printing with metal types was a Latin Bible, of six hundred and thirty-seven leaves, in two folio volumes, finished between the years 1450 and 1455, for it has no date. It has been called the "Gutenberg Bible," from John Gutenberg, the printer, and the inventor of printing. It has been called the "Forty-Two Line Bible," because it has forty-two lines to the page; but it is commonly called the "Mazarine Bible," because a copy was discovered in the library of Cardinal Mazarine at Paris. It is printed in the large Gothic or German character, and is said to be "justly praised for the strength and beauty of the paper, the exactness of the register the luster of the ink, and the general beauty and magnificence of the volumes." Of this Bible only eighteen copies are known to exist—four on vellum, and fourteen on paper. The royal libraries of Paris and Berlin have each a vellum copy, the Grenville collection had a copy on vellum, and at the sale of Mr. Perkins' library, in 1873, a vellum copy was sold for £3,400—nearly $17,000—the highest price ever paid for any single work. A paper copy at the same sale brought £2,000. James Lenox, Esq., of New York, has a Mazarine Bible which cost him £500.

An edition of the Bible is supposed to have been printed by Pfister, at Bamberg, in 1459. It was in 1462 that the printers of the "Mazarine Bible" issued the second Bible. This is in two volumes folio, and is the first edition with a date. Faust carried to Paris a goodly number of copies of the Bible of 1462, and as they were on parchment, and the capital letters illuminated with blue and purple and gold, after the manner of the ancient manuscripts, he sold them as such at sixty crowns. In 1462 Faust also printed an edition of the German Bible, in two volumes folio, which is the first German Bible with a date. There is an older edition, without date, place or printer's name. The first edition of the whole of the Hebrew Bible was executed by Abraham ben Chaim, at Soncino, in 1488, folio, with points. In 1535 the first translation of the whole Bible ever printed in English was completed abroad, under the direction of Miles Coverdale, and is therefore called Coverdale's Bible.

In 1475 an edition of the Dutch Bible was printed, and I think it was the first edition. There is no very early printed French version of the Bible. I cannot find any account of any version of the Scriptures of 1458, dated or without date. So I think that date given by Mr. Webster is incorrect. I should be glad to know the date of the oldest Bible Mr. Jefferson possessed, and as his library was sold to Congress, perhaps this fact could be ascertained, unless the fire that destroyed so much of the Congressional Library destroyed also any old Bible of Mr. Jefferson's library. Mr. Jefferson says, in a letter to Thomas Cooper, shortly before his library was sold to the United States: "My library is one of the best selected libraries in the country * * * Fifty volumes contain the Bible, or parts of it, in several languages; more being in Greek than in any other, and of the best editions too." An article on "Libraries in Boston and Its Vicinity," in Bibliotheca Sacra, January, 1850, says: "There is in the library of Mr. George Livermore, of Cambridge, a Latin Vulgate, large folio, printed at Basil, 1470. This is believed to be the oldest printed Bible in this country, excepting Mr. Lenox's Mazarine Bible. There is also the first Greek Bible, printed by Aldus, at Venice, 1518," etc. If any are curious to know about early editions of the Bible, I refer them to Townley's Bib. Lit., Anderson's Annals, etc., Hallam's Middle Ages, Dibdin, Tiraboschi, etc.

Nashville Letter.

MR. EDITOR: Having had the pleasure of reading your paper for many years, and sincerely desiring its success, I thought I would spend a leisure hour in dropping you a few lines about Nashville as it has appeared to me the past week. It has been a week of unusual interest to Southern Methodism. Monday and Tuesday were the days on which the Vanderbilt board of trust held their meetings. A great deal of important business connected with that institution was transacted. Great care was observed in selecting men to complete the faculty. It is thought, as it now stands, that it is not inferior to that of any institution in America. The impression is widespread that Vanderbilt has before it a very prosperous career. It is intended to meet the wants of the entire South in its educational advantages.

In company with several gentlemen I visited the grounds, which are being beautified by extensive improvements. The main edifice is approaching completion, and when finished will cost about $150,000, and will contain forty rooms, suited to every demand. Eight professors' houses have been erected at an average cost of about $3,500 each. The house being finished off for Bishop McTyeire, the president of the board, is a gem of beauty, and of costlier grade than the others. It is a marvel of convenience. The Bishop takes great pleasure in walking over the grounds and discoursing on their beauties. The surroundings are to him an inspiration, and lift him to a high plane of contemplation. He looks for the church and country to reap through the Vanderbilt rich harvests of good. I am told the Bishop has an interesting family. His wife is a noble-looking lady whom I knew in her beautiful maidenhood.

Dr. Summers and wife (the latter of whom retains her fine appearance) I met on the street, and was cordially recognized by them. Long may their useful lives be spared. I had the pleasure of taking tea with my dear old Alabama friends, Profs. Lupton and Dr. Hargrove and their families. The latter introduced me to a lovely daughter, whom he said I had baptized when she was a child. If the training of an intelligent Christian father and mother is a blessing, then she has been blessed, and must make herself a blessing to the world.

I was frequently with Dr. Young, but did not become acquainted with his wife, of whom I heard many kind things. One was that she was as useful as the doctor. Certainly a high compliment. The day before yesterday I dined with Dr. Kelley, and yesterday with Dr. Redford. They are both blessed with elegant wives—so genial, so winsome, so happy, so full of gushing hospitality, and withal so useful. Their sunny presence made me forget for a time the dull cares of life. They know well how to fulfill the mission of woman.

The Publishing House seems to have shaken itself free from its financial shackles, and promises to remain free in the coming years.

Nashville is a lovely city—full of vitality. She anticipates a grand future. Her public buildings are put upon a magnificent scale. Its capitol cost over $2,000,000, built of white marble, and commands an extended and enchanting view. The Fisk University, for negroes, is no mean rival of the Vanderbilt. Its public schools are of a very high order. Old bachelors are taxed to support them. This law may force them to marry in self-defense. This be it said for the comfort of our damsels and dames.

The two leading secular papers are the Republican Banner and the American Union, which are ably conducted and widely circulated.

Edgefield, opposite to Nashville, and connected with it by a costly suspension bridge, is growing in population and in almost every important interest. These cities are situated in one of the loveliest of countries. Tennessee can hardly be rivaled for its fertile lands, beautiful scenery, valuable stock, and fine-looking men and women. I anticipate for it no second place among the States of the Union.

I have attended several meetings at the Exposition building, conducted by Whittle and Bliss, and assisted by the local ministers. Thousands flock thither day and night to hear the word, and many are turning unto the Lord. The revival spirit is deep and widespread. Mr. Whittle read letters from Mr. P. Smith, now in Berlin, and carrying on a great work. The revival in England continues, it seems, without abatement. May the earth be filled with the glory of the Lord. Whittle preaches and Bliss sings the gospel. The sermons of the one and the songs of the other are strikingly cognate. The latter seem an application and enforcement of the former. Mr. Bliss has a musical voice, and one of great compass and power. The words of his songs, which are full of evangelical truth, are pronounced as distinctly and clearly as those delivered in the sermon. Certain expressions are so emphasized as sometimes to produce wonderful effects. They are not oratorical or brilliant, but evangelical, earnest and practical. They believe in immediate results, and in a genuine work of grace on the heart. The doctrine of the new birth has great prominence in their deliverances.

On Saturday, the eighth instant, I had the pleasure of dining with the Bishops at Bro. Fite's, the son-in-law of Dr. A. L. P. Green, lately deceased. He is a most worthy and influential member of the Methodist Church, and has a charming family. My home is with Sister Hunter, a widowed daughter of Dr. Green—a worthy child of such a father. Here I find Sister Green and her mother, Sister Elliston, both of whom are to me very interesting persons. The latter is in her eighty-seventh year, and retains her intellectual vigor in a wonderful degree.

On Sunday, the ninth, many pulpits were filled by the Bishops and other visiting ministers. I had the pleasure of preaching at eleven o'clock, in the First Presbyterian church, to a very large congregation. I witnessed the reception of sixty members into the church, and enjoyed with them a most delightful communion season. How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

At night Bishop Pierce preached at the large Exposition building, where Whittle and Bliss hold their meetings. The wind and rain and thunder and lightning made the night exceedingly unpromising for religious services, yet the congregation was good, and our Bishop stirred our hearts and sent us home glowing with godly fervor.

I must close, for my pen has already run with a freedom which I did not intend when I began this letter. Yours truly,

C. D. OLIVER.

MONDAY, May 10, 1875.

REV. HARVEY F. JOHNSON, president of Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss., was on a brief visit to the city last week. We learn from him that Whitworth has a large number of students in attendance, and that the institution is in a prosperous condition. Bro. Johnson informs us that they have the promise of good crops in Mississippi, and that there is some improvement in financial affairs. He is hopeful of a large advance on the missionary collections of last year in his section.

WE ARE INDEBTED to the pastor, Rev. M. W. Trawick, for complimentary tickets to the entertainment for the benefit of the Presbyterian church on Canal street. The entertainment will be given at St. Patrick's Hall, May 31 and June 1, 2, 3, 4.

HE that stays in the valley shall never get over the hill.

Catechisms and Uniform Lessons.

Anent this subject we quote from the New York Christian Advocate:

It has been our misfortune sometimes to disapprove of some things said or done by one or more of our Bishops, but much more frequently we have had the pleasure of agreeing with them. Some will have it, however, that we make very free with our criticisms of these venerable "superintendents," and are almost ready to grant us a patent for that sort of productions. We should not be at all inclined to accept anything of the kind were we certain that the thing would be wisely used by others—of which the following is not quite assuring. On the last page of the Normal Class for May we find the following, for which we must hold the editor responsible, though the matter is chiefly taken from another paper:

"The National Sunday School Teacher thus irreverently states a mortifying fact: 'Last year the Methodist Bishops in their pastoral address expressed the conviction concerning the International lessons that, 'important as they are, yet there is a liability that the time and attention of the school may be too much given to the study of these lessons.' This year their utterance is not much more satisfactory. They regard the Sunday school as 'a most important agency for the moral and religious education of the young,' yet they deem it advisable to call attention to that paragraph in the Discipline which enjoins the use of catechisms in Sunday schools and families, and the instruction of the children in the doctrines of the church. That 'yet' takes away all the force of the commendation. We shall begin to think that Methodist Bishops merely regard themselves as brakes upon the wheels of Sunday school progress, instead of the leaders that pull them forward.'"

Now, with all our defect of reverence for the censured church officials, we confess to some little satisfaction in finding that they so decidedly second what has long been with us a painful conviction. With all our admiration of the Berean lessons—and we do admire them—we are still painfully impressed that they are sadly deficient in the matter of definite presentation of the great basal truths of Christianity, and that, unless supplemented by a faithful use of the catechisms in our Sunday schools, they lead to a theory of definite religious knowledge in the church. The caution of the Bishops is timely and called for.

THE BISHOPS' FUND.—Dr. Redford, the bank agent, has been the treasurer of the Bishops' fund, and has managed that interest with great success. Last week he tendered his resignation, whereupon the College of Bishops—as reported to us by Bishop McTyeire, the secretary—adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the College of Bishops respectfully decline to accept the resignation of our honored friend, Dr. Redford, as treasurer of the Bishops' fund, just tendered by letter; and we take this occasion to express to him the high estimation of his past services in the relation he has held to us, and our grateful sense of obligation to him, and we request him to continue as treasurer.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE Christian Convention met in London, at the Haymarket Theater, May 5. Mr. Moody was chosen chairman. Canon Bateshy, of the See of Carlisle, Canon Fremantle, chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Cholmondely, the Rev. Mr. Aiken, and many hundred other delegates representing the principal towns in the kingdom, were present. The Rev. Mr Kellman, of Edinburg, in his address, stated that the results of Moody and Sankey's preaching in that city were truly marvelous. Three thousand persons had been converted, and the number of drunkards and theater-goers who had been reclaimed was remarkable. A delegate from Rome gave an interesting account of the progress there. Addresses were also delivered by other delegates from the Continent.

THE death of Gen. John C. Breckinridge will be deeply regretted by the people of the South. He was a gallant soldier, an able and honest statesman, and a jurist of extensive attainments. Cultivated, refined and noble, there was no blot on his escutcheon. He was the son of John Breckinridge, who filled the posts of United States senator and Attorney General. He was born in 1821, served with distinction in the Mexican war, elected to Congress in 1851, elected Vice President in 1856. In 1860 he was the Democratic candidate for President, and in 1861 he was a member of the United States Senate. He entered the Confederate army with the rank of brigadier general at the close of 1861, and in January, 1865, was appointed Secretary of War. After the war he resided for two or three years in Europe. He died at his home in Lexington, Ky., May 17.

REV. W. H. MILBURN, the noted blind preacher, passed through New Orleans a few days ago. He had an engagement to lecture at Vicksburg on the eighteenth, and will make quite an extensive lecture tour through the State of Mississippi. Mr. Milburn is widely celebrated as a finished orator, and an accomplished and entertaining lecturer.

THE notice of the Seashore camp meeting will be found at length on the eighth page. All interested should read it carefully. The time has been changed from the fourteenth to the twenty-first of July.

Look at the Letter List.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher upon the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

AMONG worthy enterprises deserving success and substantial encouragement by the railroads, hotels and mercantile generally of the city, we would direct attention to the New Orleans Semi-Annual Trade Guide, so ably issued for the past nine years by Mr. D. Webster, No. 15 Camp street.

With a view of materially assisting the growth of the South American trade, the Guide has taken a new departure and has connection with its regular fall publication, for the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Florida and Texas, proposes a new field of distribution, and a special circulation of the Guide, to be sent, through its agents, to all the Spanish Islands, and the principal towns of South America, beginning at Vera Cruz, and embracing Tampico, Progresso, Merida Mexico and all other points by which the commerce of New Orleans may be benefited.

To any Spanish-American houses, such as coffee, tobacco, sugar, oil and fruit dealers, having intimate business connections with the points above mentioned, will this be a particularly appropriate medium and the opportunity so highly presents itself for being enabled to advertise in the language of the country that we think but few of our far-seeing merchants will be so blind to their own interests as to fail adopting this excellent means of commanding with their business friends, and opening and encouraging new avenues of trade.

The Guide has not only proved itself a credit to the city, and a remunerative advertising medium to its patrons, but its regular and handsome appearance gives to the merchants of the Interior that confidence in our business men and city that is justly deserved.

The Guide, as usual, will be handsomely embellished with cuts of the principal views and attractive places of the city, and the houses of our prominent business men.

We shall again have occasion to speak of this enterprise. Meanwhile we heartily commend it to the public, and hope to hear of its merited encouragement.

CANDY MANUFACTORY.—Messrs. Miller & Dielmann are manufacturing candy and fruit syrups on a large scale. They keep on hand an extensive stock of candy and cigars.

MR. A. DURIEU, at the Blue Store, corner of Orleans and Claiborne streets, offers shoes at wholesale prices. Read his advertisement.

COAL.—Messrs. B. D. Wood & Bros., 106 Common street, whose advertisement may be found elsewhere, are extensive dealers in coal, and may be relied upon for fair and honorable transactions. Planters and others on the coast who wish to make engagements for the delivery of coal at their plantations could not, in our opinion, deal with better men.

UNDER the head of Business Notices will be seen the notice of Brodie's Astringent Cordial, a specific for diseases of the bowels. For sale by I. L. Lyons, corner of Camp and Gravier streets.

PRODUCE COMMISSION BUSINESS.—We call attention to the copartnership notice, in another column, of the Messrs. Matthews Bros., in the produce commission business at 71 Poydras street.

WOOD AND COAL.—Samuel Smith, at 351 Dryades street, keeps the best articles of wood and coal, and we have found him correct in all his dealings. See his advertisement elsewhere.

FOR dry goods at reasonable prices we advise our readers to go to Levy Bros.', 580 Magazine street. See advertisement for particulars.

FOR ICE we refer our readers to the advertisement of M. B. Childress. Special attention given to orders from the country.

Farm, Garden and Household.

A Plum Curculio-Proof.

Travelers on the North Pennsylvania railroad from Philadelphia during early autumn can enjoy the rather novel sight of whole trains of cars loaded with plums. Every farm along the line of the road for some distance has its complement of trees, and the amount of fruit is annually swelled to hundreds of baskets. The variety grown is a seedling from the old Blue Damson, and originated in Bucks county, where it is called the Richmond. The fact that it is almost curculio-proof is the great reason for its popularity in this section, because it is very far from first quality in point of flavor. In size it is somewhat larger than its parent, and has a reddish purple skin covered with a bright bloom. Although not first-class, the flesh is sweet, juicy and refreshing. It is well adapted for the kitchen, and this accounts for the Philadelphia market.

The tree is a straight, upright grower, quite hardy, and an early and regular bearer. It is generally propagated from suckers, a method not to be recommended; far better to have them budded upon non-suckering stocks. We know that in some sections of the country where the curculio is not so plentiful, and where the fruit men can save their crops by jarring the trees, that this plum would be entirely ignored as worthless; but for the majority of our farmers and small places one or two trees will always yield sufficient for family use, and will answer quite well while experiments are going on with the thin-skinned, delicious varieties that fail in the majority of localities. Do not understand that we wish to discourage any one from fighting the "little Turk" from his plum orchard; but where one industrious cultivator, like the horticultural editor of the Country Gentleman, can save his crops, hundreds of others, through lack of perseverance, never obtain a solitary specimen; and to this latter class we recommend the Richmond.—New York Tribune.

SWEEPING.—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: "It is surprising how few understand this daily necessity, and in consequence it has become a great dread not only to housekeepers themselves, but to the entire family.

"Its object is to remove dirt and dust, and not to raise it in the air to settle again over everything. There are various ways for its accomplishment; many are good, but of course I can only give you mine, which is as follows, choosing the family sitting-room for my illustration: The time, before breakfast if possible, if not, after the children are off to school, and your gentlemen at their various places of business.

"1. Protect your head from the dust, and your hands with a pair of old gloves.

"2. Pick up everything that is out of place; remove table covers; cover your lounge or sofa with a sheet, and other articles that you can.

"3. Take your dust-pan and broom, removing the litter round the stove, work-table and plant-stand.

"4. Open at least two windows or doors, move all articles from the wall, and, after making the corners and edges of your carpets clean, put each article in its place. Then take up carefully all the dust you have dislodged, and then proceed with the center of the room. Do not throw your broom high, but let your motions be quiet as well as thorough.

"After the dust has well settled begin to dust, taking your stove, mantles and most exposed points first; then remove covers, and with feather duster (mine is a nice wing) make your window sashes, door moldings and picture frames tidy.

"As the finishing is essential, I dampen my broom by sprinkling with my hand with clear water, and dust my carpet by a few delicate passes over it.

"After many years of experiment I have adopted the above for my Monday's sweeping, and find, with a little care, the remainder of the week keeps home at least comfortable."

YELLOWS IN THE PEACH.—If you dig around a peach with the yellows you will be first struck with "a mushroomy" smell. Picking out the roots, and examining them with a lens, you will see millions of thread-like fibers, which are the Mycella of fungi. These eat the young fibers, and leave only the main roots, through which all the nutriment of the plant has to be gathered; and as an old root is unable to do much more than draw in water, the tree becomes in a measure starved, and the leaves become yellow, just as they would be if growing in poor soil, which, though the plant might have plenty of roots, furnished nothing for the roots to eat. To have plenty of roots and no food is equivalent to having plenty of food and no roots. The effect on the plant is just the same. Hence remedies which look to the destruction of this root parasite are employed. Hot water has done it; so has a weak solution of salt; others have found a solution of potash succeed. The exact nature of this fungus, so far as we know, has not been investigated to entire satisfaction. Fungi are very polymorphous. This one may enter into the circulation of the plant, and exist in that case as an apparently distinct species, extending through the tissue, and destroying as it goes. This seems likely from some experiments by Mr. Thomas Taylor, of the Department of Agriculture, reported some time ago in our pages.—Gardeners' Monthly.

CATNIP FOR BEES.—A correspondent of the American Bee Journal writes: "For some years past I have been giving much attention to honey-producing plants, and am constrained to believe that the catnip plant has not received the consideration that its importance justly entitles it to. For three years past I have been sowing the seed on waste places, in all directions, for the distance of a mile or more from my apiary, and I have never seen anything equal it. It commences to bloom here the last week in June, and lasts fully three months, giving a continuous yield from the time the white clover fails till frost.

"It thrives in any part of our country; stands our continuous summer drouths better than any other plant, and never fails. Our bees are on it every moment of daylight there is, from one month's end to another; not even a smart rain will drive them from it. Notwithstanding it is now the driest time that has been known here for many years, the bees make a constant roaring over the little catnip-field which I am cultivating. We shall plant more of it for cultivation next spring, or rather winter. January and February is the best time to sow it. Quinby says: 'If there is any article that I would cultivate especially for honey it would be catnip. I find nothing to surpass it.'"

RED PEPPER AND POULTRY.—A lady correspondent of the Poultry Bulletin says: "I do not know if other persons who raise poultry and pet birds are as much dependent as I am on red pepper; but I have found so much benefit from its use in my poultry-yards and bird cages that it may not be amiss to call the attention of others to its good properties. I do not speak of the article that is sold in the drug stores (and sometimes not remarkably fresh,) but of the capsicum that grows in our gardens. I have tried all the different varieties, and that the most pungent and efficacious is the small kind usually known by the name of the 'bird's pepper.' The plant in itself is a beautiful object; it grows about two feet high, and in autumn its bright little scarlet berries look like coral beads peeping from under the dark green foliage. Indeed one plant forms a very pretty ornament for a flower stand. The seeds possess a stimulating and reviving property, and I find that two or three given to newly-hatched chickens, especially if they are weakly, have a most happy effect. If a hen looks feeble after molting, six of those berries or pods, given daily in some corn meal and sweet milk, improve her wonderfully. Last year two of my finest canaries began to droop. Every day I gave them each one seed of the 'bird's pepper,' and in less than a week they were quite well. The same remedy is invaluable for mocking birds."

USEFUL INFORMATION.—Castor oil is an excellent thing to soften leather.

Cream of tartar rubbed upon soiled white kid gloves cleanses them well.

A solution of cyanide of potassium is the best poison to kill insects of any kind.

A pint of mustard seed put in a barrel of cider will preserve it sweet for several months.

A mixture of oil and ink is a good thing to clean kid boots with; the first softens and the latter blackens them.

A simple remedy for removing freckles is a pint of sour milk and a small quantity of horseradish. Let the mixture stand over night, and use it as a wash three times a day until the freckles disappear.

The leaves of geranium are an excellent application for cuts when the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of the same kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied on linen to the part, and the wound will become cicatrized in a very short time.

All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind, in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder, after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and pot-ash.—Ohio Farmer.

THOSE inactive and dilatory creatures who are still essaying and purposing, but never acting and proceeding, resemble St. George, who is always on horseback, but never rides forward.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The river is 6 feet 3 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourteenth instant:

Mississippi river and bayous	991
Red river	304
Ouachita river	14
Railroads	1,459
Mobile	464
Texas	118
Florida	8
Total	3,358

On Saturday, under a decline of 1-32@¼c. in futures at New York, with no encouraging telegrams from Liverpool, the market appeared to be inanimate at the opening, but the sales up to 12 M., nevertheless, reached 1,000 bales, mostly at previous rates, after which the movement continued slack, and the additional transactions reported did not exceed 1,000 bales, making a total of 2,000 bales. On Monday, with no dispatches from Liverpool owing to the Whitsuntide holiday, which continued on Monday, and no change at New York except a falling off of 1-32@5-32c. in futures, the market opened with nothing to stimulate the demand. There was, nevertheless, a fair inquiry, and up to 12 30 P. M. nearly 1,000 bales changed hands at prices indicating no quotable variation. Later in the day, buyers being unable to go on at their limits, the demand subsided and the outlay business was confined to 1,150 bales. On Tuesday, with no dispatches from Liverpool, the market opened inanimate and continued quiet throughout the day, the sales embracing only 900 bales. There was, however, some inquiry, but mostly from buyers who came forward with offers which factors would not accept, the ruling rates being above the limits of most of the pending orders.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,650 bales, against 8,100 for the corresponding time last week and 4,950 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 971,940 bales, against 1,155,-538 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 251,909 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 253,557—3,366,379, against 3,639,936. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 28,488 bales to Great Britain, 37,189 to France and 188,426 to other foreign ports. SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday, the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $40, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner-load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees; William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran, J. H. Keller, B. O. L. Rayne, G. W. W. Goudwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. PAUL, May 19.—Destructive fires are raging in the woods along the Lake Superior and Mississippi railroad, near the North Pacific junction. Over thirteen hundred cords of wood burned, and several lumbering outfits destroyed.

Advices from Winnepeg say myriads of grasshoppers are hatching out.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Mary Lincoln, widow of the martyr President, was adjudged insane by the Cook county court this afternoon. The strictest secrecy had been maintained respecting the affair, and very few persons besides those directly interested were in attendance. The proceedings were at the instance of her son, Robert Lincoln. The unfortunate lady appeared in court neatly attired in the deepest mourning, and requested Isaac N. Arnold, one of Mr. Lincoln's foreign ministers, to act as her attorney. A jury was chosen from among the most intelligent citizens, Congressman Farwell being one. The testimony left no room for doubt.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Mrs. Lincoln, upon petition of her son Robert, was sent to the insane asylum. Her property exceeds $75,000, which she is incapable of managing.

CHARLOTTE, May 20.—There was a grand celebration to-day. Guns were fired and miles of people formed the procession. Some of the most notable men of the Old North State addressed the vast crowd, giving them the history of a hundred years ago.

Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana, ex-Gov. Walker, of Virginia, H. M. Polk, of Tennessee, ex-Gov. Vance, of North Carolina, and others, are speaking to acres of people. There is immense enthusiasm, and cheer after cheer rends the air amid occasional discharges of sky-rockets and other pyrotechnic displays.

OSCEOLA, PA., May 21.—A fire broke out at eleven o'clock yesterday. All the public buildings except the Catholic and Methodist churches burned. About two hundred houses are also destroyed. Twelve hundred people are houseless. Escape was cut off by the woods taking fire. No lives lost. Loss over $2,000,000.

TYRONE, May 21.—The fires are still raging furiously through the woods in the neighborhood of Osceola Mills, Pa. About two hundred houses were consumed in Osceola and four hundred families rendered homeless. Great praise is due to Mr. D. D. Wood, train-master at Tyrone, who, through his heroic conduct and presence of mind, saved a great many lives. He got a lot of box cars, and, after loading them with men, women and children, sent them through the burning forest at an extremely fast speed to Philipsburg. Four such trips were made, and about one thousand people taken to a place of safety. Great excitement and consequent confusion prevailed among the people.

ST. PAUL, May 21.—The Pioneer Press publishes dispatches from a considerable number of localities in all parts of the State relative to the grasshoppers. There are no grasshoppers in the district devastated by them last year, nor in any part of Minnesota, except in a very small area and in comparatively small numbers, confined to the group of counties and the great bend of the Minnesota river.

ST. LOUIS, May 21.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the South met again this morning, Moderator Hoge in the chair. The usual standing committees were appointed. The committee of sustenance made a report. Rev. William Brown, D. D., chairman of the committee on friendly relations between the Northern and Southern churches, made a lengthy report, which was laid over for further consideration.

SCRANTON, PA., May 22.—The school-houses and nearly all the residences in the villages of Evergreen, Stoddardsville and Goldsboro are burned. A thousand acres of forest are flaming. Other settlements and saw mills are threatened. Three miles of the Pennsylvania Coal Company's gravity road, on the celebrated Highland range, twelve miles from Scranton, are destroyed. Immense coal and passenger traffic completely embargoed. Without rain, one thousand four hundred square miles of forest lands are doomed. This section, from its beauty, is known as the American Switzerland.

OSCEOLA, May 22.—The Methodist and Catholic churches, with a few buildings in the vicinity, have been saved. The rest of the town is totally destroyed. A thousand or fifteen hundred people lost everything.

The village of Housdale burned, and hundreds of woodsmen lost their homes. The losses in the region, including Housdale, reach $3,000,000. The fire swept ten or eleven townships in Pike county. The fire originated by tramps breaking into a hut and firing it.

KANSAS CITY, May 23.—Grasshoppers have penetrated the heart of the city, moving in a vast army, going north. Trenches are being dug and millions are slaughtered, but nothing can stop the red-legged pests in their march. Many drive them from their grounds with water from hydrants. Their depredations are becoming very serious, lawns being stripped of grass and garden truck destroyed. Nothing can be raised except in green-houses.

MEMPHIS, May 24.—The memorial ceremonies to-day were the grandest ever witnessed in the South. Despite the threatening weather, at an early hour the streets were filled with people, bearing flowers wherewith to deck the graves. Business was almost entirely suspended, while from the numerous buildings National and Confederate flags were hung out, which, with the brilliant uniforms of the State Guards, gave the city a holiday appearance. At noon the procession was formed at the corner of Main and Exchange streets, and moved down Main.

The procession was over a mile in length, and as it passed through the principal streets, which were crowded with people bearing flowers, they gave vent to their feelings as objects of special interest were seen. At the head of the mounted ex-Confederates rode Gen. Forrest and the surviving members of his staff, while the Mexican veterans were led by Gen. Gid. Pillow. In one carriage were two large flags—Federal and Confederate—made entirely of flowers, the latter partly furled, the National flag flung to the breeze. The number of ex-Federals participating in the procession was about one hundred, representing nearly every State in the Union, among whom were Lieut. Col. George Gibson, United States army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24.—The Young Men's Christian Association of this city held its annual meeting in Lincoln Hall. The annual report shows 240 new members during the year. The total membership is 820. Receipts for the year, $8,496; disbursements, $7,831. The association has made arrangements to attend the convention in Richmond on Thursday. A special train will leave here at six o'clock in the morning and return by the next morning.

LACKAWANNA, May 24.—The fires raging in the counties of Pike, Wayne and Monroe, Pa., and Orange, N. Y., checked by Friday's rain, are again gaining strength.

ST. LOUIS, May 25.—The St. Louis Presbyterian General Assembly, to whom was referred the matter of friendly relations between the Northern and Southern churches, reported that while they greatly regretted that the conference at Baltimore, last January, was unsuccessful in bringing two great bodies together in friendly and cordial relations, they heartily indorsed the position of their committee as the only one they could have taken under the circumstances.

CLEVELAND, May 25.—In the Presbyterian General Assembly an unsuccessful effort was made to have the action of the Assembly on the report of the conference committee with the Presbyterian Church South reconsidered.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, May 25.—The upper house of the Prussian Diet passed bills for the suppression of convents and relative to the administration of church property.

ROME, May 25.—The Pope is seriously ill.

MONTGOMERY CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed my third round on this circuit. I arrived at Atlanta on the last of January. The stewards procured me a comfortable home. I received a cordial welcome at all the appointments, and am well sustained so far. Have eleven appointments. A revival spirit pervades the entire work. Sinners are converted in the church, and some in their fields even while plowing. On last Sabbath evening you could have heard twenty-five persons shouting aloud, while sinners were crying: "What must we do to be saved?" Up to date fourteen have joined the church. There are many others waiting for a convenient season. God grant that the time may soon arrive when the blessed cross of Jesus shall have been lifted to every mortal gaze.

HAZLEHURST, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a meeting in our church at this place, which resulted in a gracious revival and eleven accessions to the church. We received four members just prior to the meeting, making a total of fifteen this year.

Vanderbilt University.

The Nashville Advocate furnishes the following interesting sketch which we reproduce for the information of our readers:

The site is the most eligible of the many fine ones about Nashville—a rising ground in West End, on a level with Capitol Hill, and on the extension of Broad street, nearly a mile from the corporation limits. The plot of land contains 74 acres, and lies in an oblong square, the Harding road running by its north line, and the Hillsboro road its southern boundary. In front is the city, and the meanderings of the Cumberland river may be traced from the upper stories of the university. In the rear are the elevations—a lowlander would say mountains—that stand around the City of Rocks, with the distant hills of Harpeth glimpsed between their openings. The views on all sides are fine, and the conditions of salubrity may be said to be perfect.

The excavations for the foundation were begun September 15, 1873, Bishop McTyeire lifting the first spade of earth with: Nisi Dominus ædificat domum, in vanum laboraverunt qui ædificant eam. The corner-stone was laid by Bishop Pabne, April 28, 1874, Bishop Wightman making the address. The building has moved steadily on, and up to this time there has been no adversary nor any evil occurrent. The shape of the building is cruciform, this being considered best for light and ventilation. The width of each projection or wing is 56 feet, and the length of the northern, southern and western 60 feet. The cut does not show the last, in the second story of which is the chapel. The east and west elevations present a front of 176 feet each in length, with a height of 60 feet from the ground to the top of the cornice. The north and south elevations show 133 feet—i. e., from the face of the greatest projection on the east front to the face of the greatest projection on the west front. The central projection on the east front, in which is the main entrance, is flanked by a tower on each side, which affords two additional entrances to the basement story and main floor. The towers also contain the stairways leading to the upper stories. From the east to the west front there is a continuous corridor, 14 feet wide, intersecting a central corridor, 20 feet wide and 52 feet long, to the line of the stair halls, the latter being 15 feet wide. The area embraced in the plan of basement is partitioned off into lecture-room, laboratories, apparatus-rooms, offices for the department of chemistry and natural philosophy, together with water-closet apartments, and a room for coal and heating apparatus. All the apartments will be warmed by steam, with 2 boilers of 30 horse-power each.

The basement is 13 feet high, with 9 feet above the ground level. The first floor above the basement contains the chancellor's office, faculty-room and cloak-rooms, together with 6 lecture-rooms for the professors of ancient and modern languages, and moral philosophy, etc. There are offices for the use of professors on this floor also, and convenient to their respective lecture-rooms, and one for the janitor.

The second floor above the basement is arranged for a chapel, library, an office for librarian, and lecture and recitation-rooms for the department of mathematics and civil engineering, etc. The chapel will seat on its main floor 600 students comfortably, and the library is of sufficient capacity to contain 10,000 volumes.

On the third floor are two society halls, the museum and cabinet, and the lecture-room for natural history, etc. The museum is of the same size as the library, and is over it. The society halls are spacious. It is designed to encourage these literary gymnasia, where the American youth learns the practice of manly debate—to contend for the truth—to think standing on his feet—to become familiar with and subject to parliamentary law. No countenance will be given to those "secret societies" which within the last generation have bred many disorders, and been well-nigh fatal to the literary societies that once had such just renown in the older American institutions of learning.

The corridors, except where cut off by the chapel, library and museum, are the same in every story. The central corridor in every story is made octagonal at the four corners, in which are niches. The heights of the several stories, commencing with the basement, are as follows: Basement, 13 feet; first story, 16 feet; second story, 15 feet; third story, 14 feet; and the towers are 150 feet high. In the south tower will be a clock and bell. The foundation and basement walls are of stone, and 10 feet above the surface of the ground. The class of masonry used is hammer-dressed rubble and hammer-dressed coursed work. The superstructure is of brick, with white stone dressing, such as window-caps, sill courses, etc. The thickness of the wall of the first story is 26 inches, or three brick. The second story, 21½ inches, or two and a half brick. The third story, 17 inches, or two brick. A portion of the roof is covered with slate, and the remainder with iron, and has at the top an ornamental cresting of iron. The main corners of all projections are strengthened with buttresses. The stairways are 6 feet in width, with massive balustrades.

Two tanks in the attic, of 4,000 gallons each, rest upon strong cross walls.

The building was planned by practical teachers for its specific uses. Being called in consultation, they agreed what was wanted, and then turned over the matter to the architect, Mr. W. C. Smith. It is a commodious house—larger than it looks. It contains six rooms 31 by 40 feet, twelve 18 by 28 feet, six 17 by 40 feet, eight 15 by 16 feet, four 14 by 18 feet, two 40 by 52 feet, and two 30 by 52 feet, besides a chapel 52 by 76½ feet, with an end gallery.

It is a strong house. It is said that the only addition Mr. Vanderbilt ordered made, when the plan and specifications were submitted to him, was this: "In the construction of this building the best materials to be used." Time has been allowed for these materials to knit together and settle firmly. Altogether it is the largest and noblest building dedicated to learning in the Southern States. May it stand for centuries, a worthy monument to him whose name it bears, and to whose generosity our people are indebted for it in the day of their adversity! May it be owned and blessed of the Master to the benefit of the church and of the world for coming generations!

Temperance.

MR. EDITOR: I see that Mr. Walford, of New York, has given to the world some very startling statistics, compiled from government returns, of the capital annually invested in manufactures in the United States.

He specifies seven different and most important industries, viz.: Liquors, flour and meal, cotton goods, boots and shoes, clothing, woolen goods, and books, newspapers and job printing. The first consumes yearly $129,000,000 more than all the other six mentioned. His figures are as follows:

Liquors, $739,000,000; flour and meal, $224,000,000; cotton goods, $115,000,000; boots and shoes, $90,000,000 clothing, $70,000,000; woolen goods, $69,000,000; books, newspapers, etc., $42,000,000. Total, $610,000,000. Showing the enormous amount of $129,000,000 more expended in the manufacture of liquor than in that of six of the largest and most important productions of our great country. Let us look at this enormous sum used simply in the manufacture of liquor annually: 1. If in bills of one dollar each it would reach around the world about three times. 2. At an average of one dollar per gallon, it shows eighteen and a half gallons consumed yearly by each man, woman and child in the United States. 3. Averaging the grown men at one-fifth of 40,000,000 inhabitants, it shows that each man drinks on an average 92 gallons per annum. 4. Supposing that only two-thirds drink, it will give for each tippler's allowance 138 gallons, or about one-third of a gallon each per day. 5. At $30,000 per mile it would build a railroad around the world, or 24,633 miles long. 6. It would build and supply with every apparatus 1,000 colleges, each costing $339,000, and each endowed with $400,000, which would educate 100,000 youths and maidens in the highest style of modern education. 7. It would give a good home, of 160 acres each, to 3,695,000 families, at $1.25 per acre.

Let us remember, however, that $739,000,000 in cash is the small item in the bill. It is also $739,000,000 worth of crime, $739,000,000 worth of shame, $739,000,000 worth of suffering, $739,000,000 worth of hell, yearly introduced into the human soul. No wonder we are called a "nation of drunkards." No wonder there is poverty, suffering, wailing and crime in the land. This amount doubtless employs 500,000 agents directly in the nefarious work. It is only in the fact that "one can chase a thousand" that the Christian has hope of success in working for the overthrow of this mighty evil.

A Delusion.

MR. EDITOR: I attended the baptism of a little boy about three years old, recently, in an Episcopal church, and I was greatly impressed with the terrible delusion which must obtain in many cases under such teachings.

After other ritualistic ceremonies, and putting water upon the child and crossing his forehead, the minister read from the book of prayer, page 281, as follows, viz.: "Seeing now, dearly beloved brethren, that this child is regenerate, and grafted into the body of Christ's church, let us give thanks unto almighty God for these benefits, and with one accord make our prayers unto him, that this child may lead the rest of his life according to this beginning."

Again, on the same page: "We yield thee hearty thanks, most merciful Father, that it hath pleased thee to regenerate this infant with thy Holy Spirit," etc. On page 282 the following charge was delivered to the godfather and mother, viz.: "You are to take care that this child be brought to the bishop, to be confirmed by him, so soon as he can say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, and is sufficiently instructed in the other parts of the church catechism set forth for this purpose."

Here is a soul, bound for eternity, informed that by the act of a preacher and the application of water he is regenerated by the Holy Spirit, and the only other requisite to church membership is to learn the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and conformity to other catechism instruction. Never one sentence about repentance, faith, conversion or justification as indispensable when the subject arrives at years of accountability.

Christ said to Nicodemus: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, You must be born again."

Are baptized and confirmed children ever converted, born again? If so, when and where? I never heard of revivals and conversions in Episcopal churches. They baptize and confirm, and there it ends. Should not the word of God be lifted up against such a delusion?

SPECTATOR.

The Southwestern Bible Society.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT.

MR. EDITOR: Some days ago I received from A. H. Nelson, corresponding secretary, a report of the board of directors of the Southwestern Bible Society for 1874. I presume this report has been generally circulated. It is of no special consequence that I should have received a copy, except that I was one of the committee on the Bible cause at the late session of the Mississippi Conference, and the report of said committee seemed to censure the administration of the society somewhat for the paucity of material out of which to make such report to the Conference as would be satisfactory or profitable. If that "report" had any influence at all to provoke the circulation of the "report of the Southwestern Bible Society," I for one am glad; for while I am sure there was no design to criticise, but simply to state the facts in the case, again I say I am glad if the result has been to place in the hands of every member of the Conference this annual report, even though Bro. Nelson may have felt a "little hurt" on account of our committee's report. Hope he will forgive us. We ask pardon.

Just such a publication as the one before me was needed, and every Christian man and woman in the land ought to read it. It is such an appeal as must reach the heart of every one who loves God and desires the salvation of man. Salvation is by faith. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." The experience of every minister of the gospel, aye, of every Christian, is that there is nothing like the Bible—the pure "word of God"—as an instrument for good. Other books are good to edifying; but only God's book can convert a soul. Sermons, essays, treatises, biographies, all have their place; but God's word only is life—his word only can give life.

There is an alarming destitution of the Bible in our land. Every man, woman and child ought to have a Bible. But, alas! there are hundreds and thousands of grown-up people, without including the children, who have no Bible—have not seen or read the Bible perhaps for years. Well might the great Head of the church say now, as in former years: "My people perish for lack of knowledge."

The Southwestern Bible Society commends itself to our people especially as worthy of support. It is not a sectarian establishment by any means—not denominational, but eminently catholic. It is domiciled in our own loved South, managed by Southern men, and the churches of the South will prove recreant if they fail to yield a hearty support to this noble institution. If all our preachers will take hold of the matter in good earnest, our committee on the Bible cause at the next Conference will have more than one dollar to report as the collections for the year. As one of the committee of last year, in the Mississippi Conference, I will promise, with God's help, to do better myself. God bless and prosper the Southwestern Bible Society!

Support of the Bishops.

It will be gratifying to the church to learn that, notwithstanding the extreme stringency in the monetary affairs of the country, our Bishops have been paid in full for the year ending with the last of the present month. When we consider that the support of the Bishops is intrusted to the voluntary contributions of the people, we know of nothing connected with the financial affairs of the church which indicates more fully the purpose of the membership to sustain every interest dependent on their liberality. To every department of the church our people are warmly attached, but no other has a warmer place in their heart than the episcopacy. "Abundant in labors," mingling freely with the people, untiring in the pulpit, and constant in their devotion to the work committed to them, we cannot but rejoice that a proper appreciation of their toils and sacrifices is shown by the support which they have just received. Deriving, as we do, a satisfaction from the year now closing, we take this occasion to suggest to the Conferences that there be no deficiency during the next year. The support of the Bishops is intrusted to the presiding elders to a great extent, whose duty it is to see that the amount apportioned to their respective districts be fully paid. We appeal to them, and to the preachers and people everywhere, to see to it that no deficiency is reported, but that the amount necessary be raised.

Any money collected on account of the Bishops' salary may be paid to either of the Bishops, or forwarded to me at Nashville.

THE London Methodist says: "Our American evangelists have now entered on the second month of their metropolitan campaign; and even the pessimists who foretold their failure must confess that hitherto there have not only been no signs of collapse, but that, on the other hand, both as to numbers and force, the movement has definitely gained ground. Whether it will bear transplanting, and especially whether it will bear dividing, remains to be seen. Meetings at Islington, at Bow-road, in the East End, and at her majesty's Opera House, Haymarket, are now to be held simultaneously; so that the respectable middle class of north London, the hard-handed toilers of the East End, and the fashionable 'upper ten thousand' in the aristocratic West, have this special evangel brought to their very doors. William Taylor, 'the California street preacher,' takes charge of the Agricultural Hall; Stevenson Blackwood holds forth at the Haymarket; while Messrs. Moody and Sankey itinerate all round."

PIUS THE NINTH has published a papal brief eulogistic of the late Dom Gueranger. The London Independent says the Weekly Register has published what it declares to be an "exact translation," which contains the following astounding passage: "Amidst the plaudits of the Christian people, by a solemn decree, we confirmed to the holy mother of God the celestial privilege of her immaculate conception." Suppose the same manufacturer of titles and dogmas, or one of his successors, should take it into his head to repeal the decree confirming the "celestial privilege" aforesaid, the question arises whether the dogma of the immaculate conception was operative during the interval between its confirmation and repeal, and if not, whether the blessed virgin is any better or worse in consequence.—Christian Intelligencer.

DIED, in Landlea, the Prayer Meeting, aged one year. The health of this meeting was poor most of the year, and its life was despaired of; but anxious friends kept it alive, and sometimes it would so revive as to encourage them. Discouragements, however, at last prevailed, and the prayer meeting is dead. It died from neglect. Not a Christian was present when it died. Over forty are living within a mile of it, and not one was there. Had two only been there its life might have been saved, for where two are agreed as touching anything they shall ask it shall be done for them. Two-thirds of the forty might have been, had they been so disposed, but they were not, and the prayer meeting died.

"Rejoinder" Examined.

OZARK, ALA., April 30, 1875.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.—Dear Brother: The following communication was sent to the Alabama Baptist for publication, but was returned. I hope you can give it a chance in the ADVOCATE.

The long space between the appearance of Mr. Callaway's communication in the Baptist and the date of my reply is owing to the fact that he bushwhacked me—that is to say, he fired at me and concealed his whereabouts, till I hunted him up by the smoke of his powder.

Yours in Christ,

A. DOWLING.

FOR THE ALABAMA BAPTIST.

"REJOINDER" EXAMINED.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of February 16 Rev. P. M. Callaway replies to a communication of mine which appeared in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of January 7. There are some points in the "reply" which deserve attention and examination. The first point that I shall examine is that concerning Novatian. Mr. Callaway says: "While it is admitted that the Novatian churches derived their name from Novatian, yet it is not true that Novatian was their founder," etc. This certainly is a remarkable statement, to say the least of it. Its most remarkable feature, however, is the want of historical verification. In "Jones' Church History," page 181, he quotes from Robert Robinson, in his "Ecclesiastical Researches," page 126, as follows: "In the end Novatian formed a church, and was elected bishop. Great numbers followed his example, and all over the empire Puritan churches were constituted and flourished through the succeeding two hundred years." Speaking of Novatian, in "Hayward's Book of All Religions," the following language is held forth, pages 305, 303: "He (Novatian) was never acknowledged Bishop of Rome, but was condemned and excommunicated. He still, however, taught his doctrine, and became the head of the party that bore his name." "Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History" settles the question. On page 96 he says: "Novatian upon this (the election of Cornelius to the bishopric of Rome) separated himself from the jurisdiction of Cornelius, who, in his turn, called a council at Rome, in the year 251, and cut off Novatian and his partisans from the communion of the church. This turbulent man, being thus excommunicated erected a new society, of which he was the first bishop," etc. But why does Mr. Callaway try to get rid of Novatian? Benedict and other Baptist historians claim him and his in the line of succession. It may be because the Novatians held the "dogma" of "baptismal regeneration." In order to get rid of the logical force of Novatian doctrine and practice he (Mr. Callaway) gives us a most gratifying definition of the apostle's mode of baptism. Hear him, ye doubtful ones: "Ray's Baptist Succession (chapter 7) clearly establishes the fact that the churches called the Novatian churches did not originate with Novatian of historic fame, who was the first man to make an innovation upon apostolic baptism by affusion, upon the ground of expediency," etc. In this definition he says that the "apostolic baptism" was "by affusion." It may be he did not intend to say this; however, he did say it, and now it is in print.

The next point that I will examine is that of the church founded in 1639, by Roger Williams. It seems from the way Mr. Callaway struggles to throw off historical facts that he is getting rather sick of some of the links in the Baptist chain. Of the Roger Williams church he says: "There is abundant proof that the Williams church only existed four or five months, and came to nothing," etc. Why did he not give us some of the "abundant proof?" Mr. Callaway endeavors to prove that the "Williams church came to nothing" by proving that John Clarke organized a church in 1638. Wonderful logic! Relative to the "Williams church," Mr. Benedict, the Baptist historian, makes the following record: "Then he (Williams) baptized the rest of the company, and thus laid the foundation for the first Baptist church in Providence, and on the American continent." Again: "It would be difficult at this day to make a complete list of the Baptist communities which have sprung from this prolific mother." And again: "This church shot out into diverse branches as the members increased, and the distance of their habitations made it inconvenient to attend the public worship in the town." According to this authority the Roger Williams church was the "first," the "prolific mother" "Baptist Church," which "shot out into diverse branches" upon the American continent. Could all this have been accomplished in "four or five months?" However, Mr. Callaway declares non-fellowship for this church, and claims fellowship with the "Newport church," organized by John Clarke. Who was this Mr. Clarke? Where and by whom was he baptized? According to "Backus' Church History" it is doubtful whether Mr. Callaway has fellowship with this church. On page 109 Backus says: "A small church was formed out of that (the Newport church) in December, 1671, holding to the seventh-day Sabbath, which yet continues." Does Mr. Callaway hold fellowship with the "Seventh-Day Baptist" of this country? If not, the "Newport church" avails him nothing. He has already renounced the Williams church, the "first," the "prolific mother" church. What, therefore, will he do?

Touching "the dogma of baptismal regeneration," Mr. Callaway makes an effort to shun and fly from the historical facts I brought to bear upon him in my communication, to which he attempts a reply by calling upon me to show that the Baptist Church in convention or association ever did "indorse such a dogma." I will answer this by his own logic. Where and when did the Baptist Church in national or State convention or in association ever renounce the "dogma of baptismal regeneration?" Will he give the book and page?

In all this controversy Mr. Callaway has manifestly felt the weakness of his position or of himself and has therefore been persistent in his attack upon the character of John Wesley. I say character, because he is held by this accuser (Callaway) of the brethren as radically wrong in the doctrine of regeneration. To support his position in the attack upon Mr. Wesley Mr. Callaway makes two or three quotations from a "Treatise on Baptism," which he alleges was written by Mr. John Wesley, and indorsed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1812. Now, upon the two propositions of authorship by Wesley and indorsement by the Conference, I join issue with Mr. Callaway. The "advertisement" of "Doctrinal Tracts" in which the "treatise" is found reads thus: "Several of the following tracts were formerly published in the form of Discipline; but, as this undergoes a revision once in four years, the General Conference of 1812 ordered these tracts to be left out of the Discipline; and, that they might still be within the reach of every reader, directed them to be published in a separate volume. They have been accordingly prepared and published in this form, in a stereotyped edition." This quotation shows all that the General Conference did. The Conference simply ordered the tracts, which had been published with the Discipline, to be left out of it, and "directed" that these same tracts be published in a separate volume. This "Short Treatise on Baptism" was never published in the Discipline, and was therefore not referred to at all by the General Conference, and consequently not indorsed by that body. This treatise was put into the Doctrinal Tracts by the publishers—B. Waugh and T. Mason—and upon their responsibility as publishers, and not by the direction or indorsement of the General Conference. However, Mr. Callaway may not see this truth, as he cannot quote correctly from the treatise itself, and cannot tell the number of pages in the whole treatise.

As to the authorship, I emphatically say that it was not written by the Rev. John Wesley. The name "John" cannot be found in connection with the treatise, neither in the advertisement nor in any note or statement in connection therewith. Besides, Mr. John Wesley never taught the doctrine of regeneration by baptism after his conversion. Before this grand and glorious event he believed in "baptismal regeneration" and "baptismal justification." "But after the metanoia took place in him these views passed away. He struck out the dark and damning clause which suspended 'God's wrath and damnation', over the infant world, and laid aside forever the dogma of 'baptismal justification,' as he called it, from which that awful clause flows as a logical sequence or corollary."—Southern Review, April, 1874. The above extract is from the pen of A. T. Bledsoe, LL. D., one of the most learned historians upon the American continent. He supports his statements by reference to Wesley's works, volume 9, page 157. Can Mr. Callaway unsettle the proof of Dr. Bledsoe?

The treatise in question was written by Mr. John Wesley's father—Mr. Samuel Wesley—as is shown in a volume of "Pamphlets for the People, Series 1," published in Nashville, Tenn., 1857, "edited by Thos. O. Summers, D. D." In Pamphlet No. 10, page 9, it is stated that John Wesley "reprinted in his works" "his father's 'Treatise on Baptism.'" Samples are given of this treatise which identify it with the treatise published in the "Doctrinal Tracts." In the year 1872 this treatise was the subject of controversy between a Campbellite minister and a Methodist. They agreed to submit it to the decision of Bishop Kavanaugh, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. That decision was published in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, and, although extensively circulated, was never disputed from. Some time back I wrote to the Bishop for that opinion or decision. He writes me from Louisville, Ky., April 2, 1875, as follows: "Yours of the eighteenth ultimo has been on hand for some days, asking an opinion of mine, some time since expressed, in regard to Mr. Wesley's authorship of a pamphlet entitled 'Wesley's Treatise on Baptism.' It was on the authority of Rev. Thomas Jackson, of England, one of the most learned and talented of the Wesleyan Methodists, who stated that Mr. Wesley was not the author of all the Doctrinal Tracts that were published by him. Among those specified by him as not written by Mr. Wesley is the Treatise on Baptism.

"Very few of our old English divines seem to have studied the subject of baptism closely. In my reading I have only met with two, and they are Edwards and R. Watson.

"Mr. Wesley is responsible for that pamphlet only so far as his having published makes him so."

The Rev. Thomas Jackson, in the above, was the first editor of Mr. John Wesley's works, and therefore had better opportunity and right to know what Mr. Wesley wrote than any editor since; and he says the "Treatise on Baptism" was "not written by Mr. Wesley."

Now what says Mr. Callaway about his "dilemma with only one horn?" Unfortunately for him, his dilemma is without "horn" or head.

The "steam power press" project I seem to like right well, and will enter into proposed partnership under the following condition: "That I will obligate myself to furnish the water if Mr. Callaway will the fire."

Mr. Callaway's playfulness and good humor about "letting off gas" is suggestive, particularly when it is remembered that "gas" is always let off through "a tank of water."

ANGUS DOWLING.

OZARK, ALA., April 15, 1875.

P. S.—I think Mr. Callaway is due the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE an apology for the manner in which he speaks of him when he refers to his dollar sent to the ADVOCATE. He says: "The polite and accomplished gentleman robbed the dollar, but returned the manuscripts," etc. That word robbed means cheated. Does Mr. Callaway receive the ADVOCATE? If so, his money was not "robbed." A. D.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—For the dollar sent by Mr. Callaway his name was entered on our mail-books as a subscriber for four months, and a receipt was sent him by our bookkeeper. The paper was afterward stopped, we suppose by his order or by the postmaster. We hope the above article from Bro. Dowling will end the controversy so far as the ADVOCATE is concerned.)

IN THE Rondout Methodist church, on a recent Sunday morning, the usual donning of overcoats was proceeding amid considerable confusion, but had not been completed when the pastor, Rev. J. J. Beau, arose to pronounce the benediction. He paused a moment and said: "Brethren, I guess I will put on my overcoat hereafter during the benediction, so as not to lose any time."

A TOURIST who was asked in what part of Switzerland he felt the best most, replied: "When I was going to Berne."

Obituaries.

THE Methodist Church has grown old enough to derive benefit from households whose successive generations were taught its doctrines and trained in its usages. St. Paul was filled with joy when he remembered that the faith which he was persuaded dwelt in Timothy "dwelt first in his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice," intimating, not obscurely, that ancestral piety constituted no inferior portion of the heritage of children. And why not? Even the extremest notions of hereditary depravity recognize the restraining, purifying, elevating tendency of religion, and authorize the belief that established parental characteristics are transmissible to posterity. If so, we may look for Christian households upon the ground that genuine Christian parents possess the mind of Christ, and that the influence of their example and teaching will be beneficially felt in the training of their children. The character and life of Mrs. DELIA GOFF CHAMBERLIN, who was born September —, 1832, and died at Ocean Springs, Miss., May 20, 1874, are illustrative of the truth we have suggested. The sweet-spirited mother, who lingers among the orphaned children, and waits the call of the Master, had given her to God at her birth, and with steady, prayerful spirit had sought help from above to train and guide the child of her vows in the nurture and admonition of the Almighty. Childhood's earliest lessons were of Jesus, its devoutest wish to live in the favor of God, and its most confiding trust found comfort and strength in the precious promises of his word. From her very earliest years she felt that she was "a sinner saved by grace," and all along through a cheekered life she exhibited a gentle, cheerful courage, which bore her above adversity, and gave to poverty and wasted health a charm which toil and disease could not dispel.

In 1819 she became the wife of Rev. W. C. Chamberlin, father of Rev. C. Chamberlin, formerly of the Mississippi, now of the California Conference, who was for many years a successful merchant in Natchez. How well she performed the hazardous duties of a stepmother they will testify to whom she supplied a mother's love; how liberally and how discreetly she employed wealth her thousand charities shall witness. Unselfish, suggestive, cheerful, no interest of the church, no claim of humanity appealed to her in vain. The war swept away their fortune, and, despairing of the country, Bro. Chamberlin removed with his family, in 1867, to British Honduras. Without a murmur—more: with an alacrity few have ever equaled—he met the privation and labor of exile, and for three years made their wilderness home happy and hopeful. In 1870 they returned to the United States, and in 1872 opened a hotel in Ocean Springs, where, on the fifteenth of July, 1872, Bro. Chamberlin died. A widow, frail, poor, with five helpless children, yet trusting in God, with an energy that overtaxed her declining health she administered the perplexing affairs of the establishment until the twentieth of May, 1874, when she was suddenly called to resign her charge. Faith in God had chased all fear of death away; and, longing for fuller visions of the eternal city, while mother, children, friends wept that she must die, she waited exultingly to join the friends upon the other shore.

Blessing upon the memory of a Christian mother, and blessings upon the loved ones so sadly bereaved.

W.

A GOOD YOUNG MAN GONE.

Died, in great peace, at his father's residence in Sebastian county, Ark., March 7, 1875, S. J. BREWSTER, son of C. C. and Mary Brewster, aged twenty-six years. Bro. Brewster was born in Mississippi, professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Louisiana in his sixteenth year, and lived an acceptable member until death, the last four years as an active public member in Arkansas. He was indeed a young man of many lovely and noble traits of character—gentle, kind, meek, dutiful as a son, affectionate as a brother, warm-hearted and true as a friend, beloved by all who knew him; indeed he was a general favorite in the community. Upon his manly and generous arm his aged and doting parents hoped to lean in life's hastening decline; but the Master called, and he went to live in the better land.

Although in his last sickness he suffered much excruciating pain, yet he murmured not. When asked by his mother if he was willing to die, he said if it was God's will he was ready. Although he would like to live to take care of and comfort his aged parents, still he was submissive to God's will. When the physician told him he must die he was not the least alarmed, but called his brothers and sisters around him, and kindly exhorted them not to grieve for him, but to meet him in heaven. "I cannot come back to you, but you can come to me." Twenty minutes before he died he asked the writer to pray with him, and frequently responded, "Amen! God grant it," during the prayer. When we arose from prayer he was shouting, saying: "Bless God, oh, my soul!" We then sang "The Mercy Seat" and "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" with the chorus, "Must Jesus bear the cross alone?" in which he joined with heavenly joy. He said heaven was blooming over him. Just before he died he said: "Pa, I cannot see how you look now." His last words were: "My ma, my ma." He was very much devoted to his parents and brothers and sisters.

A FRIEND.

DIED, of pneumonia, February 18, 1875, at his residence on Bayou Courtableau, St. Landry parish, La., WILLIAM S. FOOTE, in the sixtieth year of his age. He was born in Prince William county, Va., March 1, 1815, and when at school in Warrenton, Va., in the fifteenth year of his age, professed conversion and joined the M. E. Church. He emigrated to Mississippi in 1836, and being cast among strangers, where religion was not much thought of, he went back to the world. After a few years he again joined the church of his youth, and for the last twenty-five or thirty years he was a consistent, devoted follower of Christ. For many years he was an exhorter, class-leader and local preacher. On his death-bed he said he was willing and prepared for death; felt assured that his sins were pardoned; that all was well with him. The great struggle with him was the thought of leaving his children in poverty and want. He prayed to the last moment of his life, and his constant prayer was that his heavenly Father should take care of his children. On his death-bed he called his children around him and made them promise to endeavor, by the grace of God, to meet him and their sainted mother in heaven. He then quietly fell asleep in the arms of his Savior.

His mother, father, brothers and sisters were all members of the same church. A brother and sister alone survive, and the writer of this can well remember when our father's house, fifty years ago, was the home of the Methodist preacher, when Collins, Silcer, George Rozzell, Sr., of the Baltimore Conference, and many others of equal note, were wont to sit around the hospitable board and pour religious instruction into our youthful minds. These early impressions may be crushed for awhile, but loving, holy, religious feelings imbibed in youth will again spring up and bear immortal fruit.

H. F.

THOMAS WIGGINS BEASLEY, the subject of this sketch, was born in Copiah county, Miss., November 16, 18—, and died in Evergreen, La., June 22, 1873. He spent most of his life near Crystal Springs, where his host of friends now reside. In early life he was deprived of a mother's care, but her prayers in behalf of her dear boy were sealed with the promise of her Savior, in whose hands she placed him in her dying hour. Thomas was thrown providentially in the hands of his uncle and aunt to raise, with whom he lived until his death. He was naturally of a pious disposition—was never known to complain under any circumstance; was loved by all his schoolmates and associates. At a protracted meeting held in Crystal Springs by the Rev. J. W. McNeil, and under the influence of a sermon preached by him, he was converted and joined the Methodist Church, of which he remained an acceptable member until death. Thomas, like other young men in the bloom of youth, had many bright prospects in view until he was called to die. On Saturday before his death he called his aunt to his bed and said he believed he was going to die. He was sorry to leave his uncle in his old days, but it would be best. "I have thought I was taken sick to die. I am so glad that I am ready. I have been afraid that when I saw death I would be afraid; but I have prayed for faith. Now if I die all is well with me. This world is a very small thing in my sight now. I never was so happy, so full of love to God; and if I die, write to my friends at home. Tell them I am safe." The last night of his suffering he endured the most excruciating pain until a short time before his departure. He bid adieu to his friends with composure, and requested them to meet him in heaven. Then with his dying breath he prayed for all the world, and as the sun rose in the morning his pure spirit took its flight.

MRS. S. F. BEASLEY.

MR. ISAAC C. PATRICK was born in the city of Jackson, Miss., August 14, 1850, and died in Jackson, Miss., of spinal meningetis, at five o'clock P. M., April 13, 1875.

In the death of this eminently good young man we record the joyful release of a soul made perfect through suffering—one who has gone up out of great tribulation, and who now rejoices in the fullness of victory and the blessedness of perfect rest after a short but painful struggle. He was a man of happy spirit, always cheerful and earnest and honest in every pursuit. As a citizen his example was not only blameless, but praiseworthy, and his consciously exerted influence always in behalf of what was for the general good of the community. During the last few moments of his life his continued exclamation was: "God is good to the last. In him I have trusted all along." Whenever the delirium caused by pain and fever left him at all conscious, God's goodness and love was his theme. Blessed be God that he at length entered into rest, his worn and tortured body the very temple of the Holy Ghost unto the last. May God, our heavenly Father, strengthen and sustain the bereaved and heart-broken widow, and preserve her pure and true to him, as he did that husband in the midst of bodily and spiritual trial and peril, so that, after having lived and loved, sorrowed and suffered together here, they may be reunited in heaven.

WILL. H. MARTIN.

WILLIAM A. BARKER was born October 8, 1840, in Houston county, Ga.; emigrated to Mississippi, in 1844, with his parents; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the spring of 1858, at Spring Hill, Rankin county, and professed religion in the summer of 1859; was married in 1865; was class-leader for awhile in the church at Pelahatchie about 1868. He served four years in the late war, and came to Issaquena county about 1872 or 1873. Death robbed him of his dearest companion soon after he came here, and on the sixteenth of last January (1875) he received the summons, "Come up higher," which he was doubtless ready to obey. He died on Reserve Plantation, in Issaquena county, Miss., of pneumonia. His last illness was brief, and his departure was sudden and unexpected. He was a faithful member of the Friends of Temperance, a true Mason and member of the Patrons of Husbandry, and, above all, a most devoted, conscientious and consistent member of the church, strictly pious, and devoted to God in heart and practice. He lived and died a Christian. God bless and comfort his aged father and orphan child.

His pastor, T. B. WALDEN.

JOHN M'KINDLEY.

The subject of this notice was an upright, moral man; and, though he had never became a member of any church, he gave evidence of his acceptance with God before he died. John McKindley was a native of Clarke county, Alabama; was born January 23, 1820, and died at Blount Springs, Ala. The writer became acquainted with him when he first grew up to manhood, and has the evidence personally of knowing him in all that time to be a good moral, upright man in all his dealings, as school teacher, merchant and commission merchant, in which capacities he has spent his life. In Clarke county, in Mobile, and at Blount Springs he was engaged in merchandising, where he had only two or three years ago gone to recruit his failing health, when he died. His sister and brother-in-law are both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and they have written me that he had given them the pleasing evidence of his acceptance with God before his departure.

P.

JAMES H. BENTON was born in Robinson county, Tenn., April 25, 1807; moved to Claiborne county, Miss., in 1825, and died, at his residence in Lawrence county, Miss., April 1, 1875. Bro. Benton was a good man. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for a number of years. He was not an impulsive man, either in temporal or spiritual things, but ever moved steadily along—not like a comet, giving a brilliant light and then disappearing; but like an unnoticed star; nevertheless giving light, but missed most now that he is gone. He was even-tempered and kind in his family, and charitable in his views toward all. He was unable to talk after he grew dangerously ill, hence he left no testimony in his last sickness as to his future state; but while in health he often expressed himself to his wife as ready—all was well. THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1875.

THE NINETY AND NINE.

AS SUNG BY MR. SANKEY IN GREAT BRITAIN.

There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold,
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, thou hast here thy ninety and nine;
Are they not enough for thee?"
But the Shepherd made answer: "This of mine
Has wandered away from me;
And although the road be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through
Ere he found his sheep that was lost.
Out in the desert he heard its cry—
Sick and helpless, and ready to die.

"Lord, whence are those blood-drops all the way,
That mark out the mountain's track?"
"They were shed for one who had gone astray Ere the Shepherd could bring him back."
"Lord, whence are thy hands so rent and torn?"
"They are pierced to-night by many a thorn."

And all through the mountains, thunder-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gate of heaven:
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!"
And the angels echoed around the throne:
"Rejoice, for the Lord brings back his own!"

Assyrian Discoveries.

The discoveries among Assyrian remains, effected by Botta, Layard, Rawlinson, Hincks and other explorers, have thrown much and valuable light on a portion of antiquarian science of great interest to every scholar, and especially to biblical students. The recent work by George Smith, of the British Museum, published here by Scribner, Armstrong & Co., presents a fair account of the progress thus far made in excavating among the ruins of Nineveh, and the results secured. Mr. Smith was sent in 1873-74 by the London Daily Telegraph to prosecute a further search for Assyrian tablets and sculptures, from which the history of the elder Babylonian empire might be deciphered. The results of his journey are embodied in an octavo volume of four hundred and sixty pages, well and neatly illustrated. The author first gives an account of the incidents of his travels, the difficulties he encountered, the operations he conducted, and the manner by which he secured at last a safe transmission to England of the antiquarian treasures he was able to collect.

Of the importance of the field in which his investigations were carried on he speaks with becoming fervor of conviction:

"The interest attaching to the valley of the Euphrates and Tigris is of the widest kind, and, excepting the land of Palestine, no other part of the globe can compare with it in the importance of traditions, its history and its monuments. It is the home of man's earliest traditions, the place where Eden was supposed to have been; some of its cities are stated to be older than the flood; it is the land of the deluge and of the Tower of Babel, and is the birthplace of the great race of Israel, which has acted so important a part in the religious history of the world. In Babylonia arose the first civilized State, and its arts and sciences became the parents of those of the Greeks, and through them also of our own."

We condense from Mr. Smith's narrative a brief account of the rise and progress of Assyrian discoveries, which may be acceptable to our readers.

M. Botta was sent as consul from France in 1842. He went to Mosul, a town on the Tigris, opposite the site of Nineveh. Soon after his arrival he commenced excavations at Kouyunjik, which, however, he soon abandoned, and went to Khorsabad, where he had the satisfaction of finding "chambers and halls faced with slabs of gypsum carved over with mythological figures, battle scenes, processions and similar subjects. Long inscriptions in cuneiform, or arrow-headed characters, ran along the middle of these slabs." The palace discovered by M. Botta was built by Sargon, King of Assyria, 722 B. C., and is an excellent example of Assyrian architecture. His researches ended in 1845. The sculptures and tablets which he collected are in the Louvre, Paris.

Mr. Layard, by the aid of Sir Stratford Canning, English minister at Constantinople, was enabled in the same year (1845) to begin his work in the mound of Nimrod. He found in the progress of his labors the palace of Sennacherib, and also the palace of Esarhaddon, monarchs connected with Jewish history. Colonel (afterward Sir) Henry Rawlinson continued the investigations begun by Layard. The key to the reading of the Persian inscriptions was found by Grotefued, but to Rawlinson is due the credit of using that key with eminent success. In 1851 he published his work on Assyrian inscriptions, in which is contained an account of the capture of Samaria by Sargon, the war against Hezekiah by Sennacherib, and the names of persons and places mentioned in the Bible. Next after Sir Henry Rawlinson came Dr. Hincks, who, being versed alike in Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities, was thus able to contribute very much to the unfolding of the long-buried mysteries in the Mesopotamian plain.

In 1866 Mr. Smith, having deciphered a curious inscription of Shalmaneser the Second, was encouraged to go on in his studies of the inscriptions which had been brought to the British Museum by Layard and others. He translated cylinders containing the history of Assurbanipal—the Sardanapalus of the Greeks. Proceeding with the narrative of his induction into this world of antiquities, he says:

"I now again took up the examination of the annals of Tiglath Pileser, and had the good fortune to find several new fragments of the history of this period, and discovered notices of Azariah, King of Judah, Pekah, King of Israel, and Hoshea, King of Israel. In the same year I found some new portions of the Assyrian canon, one with the name of the Shalmaneser, who, according to the Second Book of Kings, attacked Hoshea, King of Israel. In 1868, continuing my investigations, I discovered several accounts of an early conquest of Babylonia by the Elamites. This conquest is stated to have happened 1635 years before Assurbanipal's conquest of Elam, or before Christ 2280 years, which is the earliest date yet found in the inscriptions. In the year 1869 I discovered, among other things, a curious religious calendar of the Assyrians, in which every month is divided into four weeks, and the seventh days or Sabbaths are marked out as days on which no work should be undertaken."

In the latter half of this most curious and instructive work we have, in serial and chronological order, translations of inscriptions concerning the flood; of early Babylonian texts narrating exploits of kings; biographies of Tiglath Pileser, of Sargon, the Babylonian Moses, of Sinacherib, Essarhaddon and other famous warriors, including Nebuchadnezzar. The inscriptions, thus far traced, disclose many matters relating to the government of the Assyrian empires, the relations between Nineveh and Babylon, the religious rites and ceremonies, the arts and sciences of the ages which they cover. Some new light has been acquired also concerning the Hyksos, the shepherd race which subdued Egypt. The date of that event is fixed at about 1700 years before Christ.

With respect to the chronology of the Babylonian records, Mr. Smith observes:

"It is quite uncertain how far back these records reach. The lists of the kings are too imperfect to construct any satisfactory scheme from them; but it is certain that they reach up to the twenty-fourth century before Christ, and some scholars are of opinion that they stretch nearly two thousand years beyond that time. Certainly a civilization, literature and government like that which we find in Babylonia two thousand years before the Christian era could not have arisen in a day, and it will probably require many expeditions to the country before we ascertain its primitive history."

The author says it is the opinion of the majority of Assyrian scholars that the civilization, literature, mythology and science of Babylonia and Assyria were not the work of a Semitic race, but of a totally different people, speaking a language quite distinct from that of all the Semitic tribes. Mr. Smith's Assyrian discoveries have been prosecuted with the simple aim to find truth, correlate facts, and draw out historic evidences from the long-buried records of vanished empires. His labors have contributed very much aid to those who are engaged in studies intended to elucidate and vindicate Bible history; and, with key in his hand to unlock the secrets of the remote past, all will wish him many years through which he may extend his inquiries into the depths of the Assyrian and Babylonian remains. Mr. Smith sometimes dwells too much on details, especially on matters of minor importance, suggestive of a desire to make a large volume; yet his book is one of great interest, and should be read by all who would keep informed as to the wonderful results of antiquarian research.—The Christian at Work.

Deterioration in Plants.

CARE IN SELECTION.

If it take twenty generations of systematic crosses and careful breeding to produce a family of cattle or horses that will breed true to the type selected, it will take but three generations to so seriously deteriorate them by neglect and bad feeding that the originals from which they sprung would not be recognized except by the critical breeder.

So with plants and useful grains—patient and persevering cultivators, by careful selection and high culture, will bring any given variety, in the course of five or six years, to such a state of superiority that the unobservant man will declare that it is not an old variety, but one entirely new. So, in some respects, it is, for it has gained increased vitality under the system of cultivation, and therefore the seed, tuber, bulb or fruit will not only be largely increased in size, but the plant also will have acquired increased power of germ formation or reproductive powers. Indeed some of our older cereals are not now recognized through the wild specimens of the same family, and of the later ones the potato is a pretty good exemplification of the effect of cultivation. Indeed nearly all of our garden vegetables, which must, perforce, be given excellent culture, and have perfectly clean soil, with a fine tilth, to produce satisfactory results, may be cited as instances.

Indian corn, which, under the modern system of cultivation, has made the West the granary of the world in this cereal, would, if allowed to grow among weeds, fail to produce ears enough per acre to pay the cost of husking and cribbing.

We all know that each year brings its ever-increasing list of new varieties of grains, vegetables and fruits. Ninety-nine out of one hundred are no better than their predecessors have been. Many of them are old acquaintances under a new name. Thus by careful selection, and the best condition as to selection, a variety of wheat is doubled and trebled in its yield. It is widely advertised and sent out, and bought by farmers, and for a short time the inherent vitality it has acquired, and perhaps superior cultivation, enable it to produce crops superior to the varieties which the farmer then has; but in the course of two or three years it begins to degenerate, and finally is no better, perhaps not so good, as the variety cultivated previously. Who is to blame—the originator who, by his careful cultivation, and as careful selection of the best grains from particular heads for seed, has brought the grain to perfection, or the farmer who has allowed it to deteriorate on his hands? Undoubtedly those into whose hands the seed had fallen. If they had taken the same pains in keeping it so that the originator did in bringing the seed to perfection, the produce would have remained identical with the samples received, or if they had used due care in saving only the choicest of the product for reseeding, and had given proper cultivation, the standard would have remained good enough.

In England, where the best cultivation is necessary in order to pay the cost and profits in raising a crop, the average of wheat is fully four times what it is with us under our system of cultivation. With us, again, the careful wheat-grower will get two or three times the average produce that the ordinary one does. It is a fact that, as a rule, the majority of our farmers, because the soil is virgin, do not give their attention to the best conditions essential to the production of full crops.

The point we wish to make is just here. To insure satisfactory results in farming, as in any other business, we must use every means in our power toward that end. Some farmers, while giving great attention to the preparation of the soil, often neglect to give care in saving absolutely plump and sound seed. While it is true that inferior seed, sown on thoroughly prepared soil, will produce far better crops than the best seed sown on weedy or ill-prepared land, it is as undeniably true that sound, selected seed, combined with thorough and clean culture, may mark the difference between the really good farmer and the indifferent one.

We have heretofore given directions how to select seed by a system of screening out the smaller though plump seeds, and blowing out the larger and more spongy ones. If, now, the farmer who has followed this plan with good results make a new departure and begin this year to select the largest ears and heads, and give them extra culture, he will find that this pays also. We believe this plan, if followed, will go further to prove the economy of high tillage than any other one thing. It is true it is only the reading farmer who can take full advantage of the practical experience of others, but we are happy to say that this number, small as it lamentably is compared to the whole, is yearly increasing.—Western Rural.

A Word to Mothers.

Each mother is a historian. She writes not the history of empires or of nations on paper, but she writes her own history on the imperishable mind of her child. That tablet and that history will remain indelible when time shall be no more. That history each mother shall meet again and read with eternal joy or unutterable grief in the coming ages of eternity. The thought should weigh on the mind of every mother, and render her deeply circumspect, prayerful and faithful in her solemn work of training up her children for heaven and immortality.

The minds of children are very susceptible and easily impressed. A word, a look, a frown, may engrave an impression on the mind of a child which no lapse of time can efface or wash out. You may walk along the sea shore when the tide is out, and you form characters or write words or names in smooth white sand, which is spread out so clear and beautiful at your feet, according as your feet, according as your fancy may dictate; but the returning tide shall in a few hours wash out and efface all that you have written. Not so the lines and characters of truth and error which your conduct imprints on the mind of your child. There you write impressions for the everlasting good or ill of your children, which neither the floods nor the storms of earth can wash out, nor death's fingers erase, nor the slow-moving ages of eternity obliterate. How careful, then, should each mother be in the treatment of her child! How prayerful and how serious, and how earnest, to write the eternal truths which shall be his guide and teacher when her voice shall be silent in death and her lips no longer move in prayer in his behalf, commending her child to her covenant-keeping God.

FACTS BETTER THAN ARGUMENT. When a man feels the power of the Holy Spirit or the power of the inner life he does not care to argue; he has a homespun philosophy of facts which answers his purpose better. Though others may round upon him and say, "You are not learned," he feels that it does not need learning to prove that which is a matter of personal consciousness, any more than we need proof that sugar is sweet when we have a piece in our mouths. Do you doubt the gospel? Try it. The men who speak against the Bible, as a rule, have never read it; those who rail against Christ do not know him; and those who deny the efficacy of prayer have never prayed. Nothing is more convincing than fact. Get out of the realm of word-spinning and wind-bag-filling into practical Christian life, proving personally that these things are so, and you will soon be convinced by the blessed witness of the Spirit, the water and the blood.—Spurgeon, in "The Three Witnesses."

CURIOSITIES OF LANGUAGE.—The Hindoos are said to have no word for "friend." The Italians have no equivalent for our "humility." The Russian dictionary gives a word the definition of which is "not to have enough buttons on your footman's waistcoat;" a second means to "kill over again;" a third "to earn by dancing." The Germans call a thimble a "finger-hut," which it certainly is, and a grasshopper a "hay-horse." A glove with them is a "hand-shoe," showing that they wore shoes before gloves. The French, strange to say, have no verb "to stand," nor can a Frenchman speak of "kicking" any one. The nearest approach he, in his politeness, makes to it is to threaten to "give a blow with his foot," the same thing, probably, to the recipient in either case, but it seems to want the directness, the energy, of our "kick." The terms "up stairs" and "down stairs" are also unknown in French.

Religious Intelligence.

A PROPOSITION is made for centennial celebrations, throughout the State, of the organization of Methodism in North Carolina. Methodist societies were first established in that State in 1775, and a circuit was formed in 1776.

CHRISTIANITY tends to worldly prosperity. The Japan Mail says the wealth in the single line of warehouses between Cornhill and Regent streets, London, would buy up the whole of Yeddo, Japan, and possibly five times over.

THE work which missionary ladies are carrying on in the zenanas is a very quiet one. It adds few if any members to the visible church as yet; even the names of converts cannot be mentioned. Within the secluded zenana walls, however, the light of Christ is rising on many a miserable life. In the Missionary Herald (English Baptist) we find mention of numerous cases of conversions and simple trust in Jesus under difficult circumstances. One of these missionaries in a city of north India remarks: "The women are getting more earnest in their inquiries, very eager for religious teaching, and bolder in avowing their belief in the truth."

A CORRESPONDENT of an English Wesleyan paper wants the Lord's Prayer to be repeated by the people at the close of public prayer in churches, and suggests that the commandments should be similarly repeated also. The London Recorder seconds the motion, saying: "As to the commandments, is it not a burning shame that in any Methodist chapel they should not be read more than two or three times in twenty years? Where is discipline, where is old Methodism? If the superintendents have been asleep, can it be that no local preacher has been awake and in his senses? Such an observance is in accordance with the inmost spirit of Methodism, which still continues to teach that it is first the law which awakens; then Christ who saves from the legal curse; then the law again, obeyed from a heart renewed and freed—an unfailing rule of life to those who believe the gospel."

THE Evangelical Christendom has a full account of the attack recently made at Huchau upon missionaries connected with the Chinese Inland Mission. Huchau is about one hundred miles from Shanghai. The Chinese Inland Mission has had several native laborers stationed there for some time. Learning that their brethren were in some danger, through the plottings of the Chinese literati, two European missionaries, Messrs. Meadows and Douthwaite, came from Shanghai for their protection. During the stay of these missionaries at Huchau the mob made an attack upon the mission premises, in which one of the native laborers lay dangerously sick. The house was completely sacked and the missionaries were obliged to flee for their lives. As the local authorities seem indisposed to make any redress, the matter has been brought to the notice of the higher officials at Shanghai.

POPE PIUS THE NINTH, having proclaimed "the great jubilee of 1875," it was formally announced recently in the Roman Catholic churches of the various dioceses in this country. The jubilee is a sort of imitation of the jubilee of the ancient Hebrews. The first jubilee was proclaimed by Pope Boniface the Eighth, in the year 1300. For some time it was observed every fiftieth year, but in the time of Urban the Sixth was changed to the thirty-third year. Pope Paul the Second fixed its return at twenty-five years, which still remains the custom. The last jubilee was observed in 1825. The 1850 one was omitted, owing to the exile of Pope Pius, and the generally sorrowful condition of the Romish Church. The faithful who desire to receive the indulgence incident on the jubilee are to make a good confession, receive the communion, fast a certain number of days, and visit once a day, for fifteen days, certain churches named in the pastoral letters of the archbishops. The time for these devotional exercises extends from the day of the public reading of the proclamation and pastoral letters to the thirty-first of December of this year.

A STATEMENT of the situation in Alaska is condensed into these two head-lines by one of our New York daily papers: "About twenty thousand souls wanting missionaries and teachers—No need of troops." As a piece of current Indian news this is somewhat out of the usual run; as an item of information it is acceptable and refreshing. Fuller details are given in a letter from Collector Carr, at Mangel, Alaska, to Hon. E. P. Smith, Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington, in which he describes an interview he has had there with the native chiefs. It appears that the tribes in that part of the Territory are about twenty thousand in number, mostly settled in villages along the shores, and that their pursuits are fishing, hunting and fur trading. Collector Carr says that they are anxious to improve their condition, and that at the interview the chiefs volunteered the offer that if teachers and ministers were sent to instruct them they would build churches and school-houses at their own cost and labor, which they are competent to do, as they are all expert in log architecture on primitive principles. They have long been envious of their neighbors on the British side of the line, at Fort Simpson, known as the Metla Katla tribe, who have advanced in civilized habits and education, by the efforts of English Protestant missionaries, quite up to the standard of the older Christian communities of the sea coasts. They have a church, school-house, etc., all erected by Indian labor, and now have native pastors and school teachers severally ministering to them. The assembled chiefs requested Mr. Carr to prepare a petition for them to the Great Father at Washington, to which they attached their signs manual, asking for ministers and school teachers to be sent among them, and it is probably by this time in the President's hands. The next thing is to answer this appeal.—Christian Union.

THE SINGING SCHOOL.

BY CARRIE W. THOMPSON.

Three little cats in a row,
These are the pupils, you know,
Pretty nice thing
Learning to sing.
This is the way the notes go:
"Do mi fol do!"
Strictest attention the little cats pay,
Dandy and Winkle and Kitty-kin Gray.

Very small boy in a row,
This is the teacher, you know—
Teacher from choice:
Very big voice,
Rolling out splendidly, so:
"Do do do do!"
Breathless with rapture the little cats look
At a fly who is traveling over the book.

Now the time jumps very low,
So do the cats in a row;
Rather dull thing
Learning to sing;
Time is exceedingly slow.
"Mew mi ow ow."
Of course the school's out when they all run away.
Dandy and Winkle and Kitty-kin Gray.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 9.

CONCERNING RATS AND MICE.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: Have you seen the compliment paid our zoologist, Tom, in the last number of the ADVOCATE by our young friend Manie? She wants you to bite your lips, Tom, and let me do the talking. I told you that you used too long words for little folks.

"But, grandpa, I use just the very words I find in my books. How can I help their being long?"

Well, can't you tell us something to-night about rats and mice that little folks can understand? You see they are getting impatient to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," and I can't tell them till you get all these subjects in natural history cleared up. I tell you, Tom, it is your fault, for I try my best to get to it. Now tell us what are rats and mice.

"They are," says Tom, "of the order Rodentia and the family Muridæ, which is divided into two geographical groups, one of which is called the Mures or Old-World rats and mice, and the other the Sigmadontes or New-World rats and mice. I'm sure, now, that's plain enough, grandpa."

Can you understand him, Charlie?

"Not a word," says Charlie.

Suppose you try, Charlie. What are rats?

"Big mice," says Charlie.

And what are mice, Charlie?

"Ittle rats."

Harry laughs and Tom looks triumphant.

Tom, are rats and mice natives of this country?

"It is thought," says Tom, "that they were brought here from Europe in ships."

What, then, are the New-World rats and mice of which you just spoke?

"I don't know, grandpa."

Well, I will tell you. The common rats and mice that infest our houses were brought from Europe, as you say, but the kind you call by that long name, Sigmadontes, which means having teeth shaped like the Greek letter Sigma, which resembles the capital E with the side bent in, were here when America was discovered. Some call them "wood mice and rats," because they live in the woods. Some of these little mice have been caught and kept in cages, where they sing almost as well as Canary birds. But the kind of rat I must tell you about to-night is the "Norway rat" or Lemming. This little animal resembles a Guinea pig very closely, except that it is black; and if it would not bite you would make a very pretty pet. They live in Norway, which, you know, is a very cold country, where every one must in the summer lay up a store of food for winter. But the Lemming is not a very thoughtful animal, and does not care for to-morrow, so only he has enough for to-day. But, notwithstanding, when winter comes they manage, by eating bark and twigs, and burrowing under the snow where they eat the dead grass, to get through the winter, and even multiply so fast that every ten or twelve years they become so numerous that there is not food in all the country enough to keep them alive. What do you suppose they do then? Why they all get together in one place and select out certain ones that must give their lives for the others, and then these martyrs form a long procession, countless thousands of them, often extending for more than a mile in length and for rods in width, a living stream of rats, and they start in a bee line for the distant sea. When this journey is once begun woe betide any living thing that gets in their way; if a man, they bite his legs and cover him all over, and he has to run to one side of them, for he might kill a thousand of them, and still there would be many thousands more to kill. On, on they go in their steady march to death, eating up all the grass and every green thing in their track, and being eaten themselves by thousands by birds which hover in flocks over them, and by fishes in the streams which they cross—on, on to the sea, into which those who remain alive all plunge and swim till they are all drowned. Doesn't this remind you of "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," by Browning? I think it is by your reader, Harry.

"Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny rats,
Brown rats, black rats, gray rats, tawny rats,
Grave old plodders, gay young friskers,
Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins,
Cocking tails and pricking whiskers,
Families by tens and dozens,
Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives—
Followed the piper for their lives.
From street to street he piped advancing,
And step for step they followed dancing,
Until they came to the river Weser,
Wherein all plunged and perished."

I would advise you to read all of this beautiful poem before our next chat; but now I must say good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From a Young Reader in British Honduras.

DEAR LITTLE READERS OF THE ADVOCATE: I have been living in this country over six years, and have seen a great many curiosities and interesting things. I was quite a small boy when I first came here. You little boys and girls that live in the States cannot imagine how different living here is from living in the States. Everything seems different. We never have any cold weather here. The trees and everything are fresh and green the whole year round.

I am always glad to see the old ADVOCATE come. It goes away up to New York and by Jamaica before we get it. A long journey! I think if one of us were to take that route we would see a great many things to interest us; but it never tells anything it saw on the way. All it tells is what the editor commands it to tell.

I want to tell you about a trip I took to the Sarstoon river. The Sarstoon is the boundary line between British Honduras and Guatemala. We live about three miles from the sea side, and it is about twenty miles from Toledo (our landing) to the mouth of the river. It is down the coast south of here. I dare say many of you would have been frightened going on the salt water in small boats, and many fair faces would be painted quite red by the reflection of the sun on the water if all of you could have just taken that trip. The Sarstoon is quite a large river. I suppose it is at least a half mile wide at the mouth. There is a little island in the mouth, and we could sit in the middle of the river and see two different countries—two foreign governments at once. We found a great many iguanas. I will have to explain to you what they are. They are nothing but a large lizard, and people eat lizards. Yes, the people in this country eat them and think them very nice. They only live along the rivers, and they eat leaves and grass. At a certain time in the year they scratch holes in the ground, I don't know how far, and deposit their eggs, and come out at another place. That is the time they catch them—when they dig into the ground—if they have not deposited their eggs. They will catch them and tie their feet over their backs, and carry them home alive; but if they have deposited their eggs they will turn them loose, as it is the eggs they want mostly. I have known them to contain as many as six dozen eggs. The eggs are a little larger than partridge eggs, and are all yellow inside. I do not like them quite as well as fowl eggs, but they are very nice. I suppose a large iguana will measure three feet from the head to the end of his tail, and weigh five pounds. They seem very harmless, hardly ever attempt to fight, and they are sometimes caught with a string looped on the end of a pole. The Spaniards think they are better to eat than almost any kind of meat. One will sell very readily for twenty-five cents.

I saw other things which I will not mention now.

Your friend,

JAY B. COPELAND.

APRIL, 1875.

TO THE BOYS:—"Don't be laughed out of your money or your prayers."

A distinguished English admiral, who rose to the high station as the effects of his meritorious exertions, used to be fond of relating that, on first leaving an humble lodging to join his ship as a midshipman, his landlady presented him with a Bible and a guinea, saying: "God bless you and prosper you, my lad; and as long as you live never suffer yourself to be laughed out of your money or your prayers." The young sailor carefully followed this advice through life, and had reason to rejoice that he did so, while thousands have unavailingly regretted that they have pursued a different course.

AN old man, who for years walked every Sunday from Newhaven to Edinburg to attend the late Dr. Jones' church, was one day complimented by that venerable clergyman for the regularity of his appearance in church. The old man unconsciously evinced how little he deserved the compliment by this reply: "Deed, sir, it's very true; but, aboon a', I like to hear the jingling o' the bells and see a' the braw folks."

FAITH is not reason's labor, but repose.—Young.

Grasshoppers and Prayer.

"The Governor of Missouri has proclaimed June 3 as a day of fasting and prayer in apprehension of the grasshoppers." Such is the telegram as we find it in the dispatches. It reminds us of Old Testament times and the simple faith of the prophets. Then the Lord sent locusts in judgment upon the people. So Moses believed and taught. Amos says: "Thus hath the Lord showed me; and behold, he formed grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and lo! it was the latter growth after the King's mowing." One verse in Joel contains reference to the locust, as Dr. Clarke thinks, in its different states or progress from embryo to full growth: "That which the palmer worm hath left hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten." Bishop Newcome translates in this order: Grasshopper, locust, devouring locust, consuming locust.

The proclamation of the Governor of Missouri is in perfect accord with the ancient call in the character of the evil deprecated: "Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God, and cry unto the Lord. Alas! for the day!" The grasshopper is an ancient pest, and one that the Lord used for the correction of the people. Another visitation in the regions where they prevailed last year would be utterly ruinous. And how widely the devouring insects may spread over fresh fields who can tell? The course of the grasshoppers' empire may be eastward and southward, until the entire land is been swept and every green thing destroyed. There may yet be a plague that would astonish Pharaoh himself if he were here to see it. If God made the grasshoppers in the olden time, we suppose he forms them in these days. Solomon says: "The locusts have no king, yet go they forth, all of them, by bands." The invisible Hand must direct their movements and order their course. To fast and pray, in view of the alarming invasion of these irresistible hosts, is certainly scriptural. A gentleman recently from Kansas says that he saw the advanced generation, very minute as yet, hopping about in the streets of Leavenworth. Later advices tell of their appearance in full battle strength.

None but devout people, and not all of them, have thought of God in connection with these living clouds of destruction. It was a chance that happened to them. They were no worse than the inhabitants in more prosperous and favored places. In this manner people reason about all their local tribulations. Famines in India, Persia, floods in the Mississippi valley, financial wreck over the whole land, the drouth that withers the corn, the frost that blights the wheat, the worm that destroys the cotton, all come to us as by blind fate, with no divine voice in them, and awaken no sense of sin in us. Considering the general and great wickedness of the people—their profanity, Sabbath-breaking, drunkenness and forgetfulness of God—what reason have we to expect fruitful seasons and smiling harvests? "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not."

It is doubtless owing to the prayer that is made that the world is kept from utterly going to pieces, and that existence on the earth is possible. More prayer would bring greater blessings, and if the people generally would repent and turn to God many judgments would be averted. It is the prevailing wickedness of the country that gives us most apprehension. We should have little fear of storms, pestilence or famine if the people were God-fearing and upright, and if the households of the land were homes of prayer and praise. The salt of piety is very little in comparison with the great mass of moral putrefaction. The light of Christian example is much, and all the light there is, but it is like the scattered lamps in a great city. There is much complaining in our streets and in our fields, but are the people forsaking their sins and seeking the favor of God?

Some Reasons for Hope.

The depression in business here in New Orleans is very great, and there is no little destitution, especially among the laboring classes and employees generally. Our city finances are in a deplorable condition, and State affairs financially almost desperate. Taxes are enormously high, and thousands of property-holders must sell property in order to pay.

On the other hand, there is peace in the political arena, with a tolerable prospect of improved legislation in the future, and that the State government will be administered with some regard to the general welfare. Capt. Eads is moving in the great enterprise of opening the mouth of the Mississippi, which will lead to the disbursement of a good deal of money, and the employment of many laborers within a few months, and, as is confidently predicted, will give a sufficient depth of water, within a year's time, for the largest merchant vessels.

The Louisiana Pacific Railroad Company is about to be organized. The object of this organization is to build a road to Texas, through the Red river valley. Our business men seem to be in earnest about it, and we are informed that there is now good assurance that something will be done. It is a question of life and death. We must have this road, and if it should take one-half of the capital and real estate of New Orleans to build it, it would still be a good investment. These two enterprises—the opening of the mouth of the river, and railroad communication with the Red river valley and Texas—will in themselves go a long way toward restoring prosperity to the Crescent City.

The Congressional appropriation for the rebuilding of our levees was lost by a single vote at the late session. It is now probable that the general government will at no distant day take charge of the levees of the Mississippi valley, and thus assure the protection of this rich and productive region. There are these elements of hope in the situation, and under their inspiring influence real estate is beginning to recover, and stocks of our local institutions have been more active than for years past.

The crop prospects are generally good. In the sugar regions the cane is doing remarkably well, and there is promise of corn and cotton in abundance. The overflow has touched us lightly this year, and the season has been propitious, in the main, for agricultural pursuits. The grange organizations are, we believe, exerting a wholesome influence upon our planting and farming interests. White immigration is being encouraged and successfully induced in some sections, and the governments of most of our Southern States are being restored to those who alone are capable of conducting them.

With industry, economy and vigilance the Southwest will gradually recover from its present prostration, and become what our soil, climate and people should make it—one of the most productive and thriving sections of the American Union.

Not the Time to Stop.

These be trying times to newspapers, and especially to religious newspapers. The territory within which is the most of our circulation has suffered more than any other part of the South. It has a sparser white population, and has been more injured by political influences. Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana have been peculiarly cursed with negro and carpet-bag rule, and with military despotism. Floods, drouths and other calamities have done much damage. There has been extreme impoverishment, and great straitness still exists. How our paper has kept afloat during these years of trial is better known to the publisher than it is to us.

We have many faithful and laborious agents among the preachers, and some thousands of subscribers who pay punctually. Thanks to them. We wish to remind them and all that their hearty co-operation was never more needed than now. Don't stop your paper if you can help it. Generally it can be helped. A religious paper in the family is as necessary as food and clothing. There is not likely to be intelligent piety and active usefulness without it. The best plan is to pay up every year, and then it comes comparatively easy. New subscriptions are coming in daily, we are told, but there are also orders to stop "till the times get better." We wish to help our people in these times, and to aid them in getting through. We are sure these are the times when they most need the ADVOCATE—the times of all other when they can least afford to be without it. It is the time when, for the sake of all the interests of the church, the canvass for subscribers should be pushed with the utmost vigor.

The editor is cheered and encouraged in his work by many expressions of love for the paper. Here is an extract from a letter from a widow lady who is in a great strait. It is a sample of several that have come to our knowledge during our editorial experience. What Bro. Harp did about this particular case we do not know, but we imagine the paper has not been stopped. We will underwrite for those noble boys, as we will for all boys and girls who prize the ADVOCATE and read it.

When I received your letter we began to try to devise some means by which you might be paid. Even to my youngest child—a little girl ten years old, who is as constant a reader of your paper as myself, the Child's Corner in particular—entered into the subject. I at last concluded that it was a sore grief, but I would have to give it up and write to you to stop the paper, and spoke to my children about it. (I have been a widow now nearly eleven years, and have no one else to advise with. They are young, but sometimes their advice is good. I have two boys, the eldest sixteen, the youngest thirteen.) My youngest little boy said: "Mamma, don't do that, but write to him that you have two boys who are large enough to work, and they will pay it if he will continue the paper. We can't do without it." Now, Bro. Harp, if you think the children's advice is good, and are willing to trust us, you can continue the paper, for which we will be ever grateful.

Moody and Sankey.

The labors of these evangelists in Scotland, Ireland and England have attracted the attention of the whole Christian world, and excited an interest unequaled since the early days of Christianity. Thousands have been converted, and the churches everywhere revived, through their influence. Several circumstances worthy of remark, connected with this movement, ought to be more generally known.

1. There is nothing in the men—Moody and Sankey—to attract general public interest. Mr. Moody, the chief speaker, is a man of very limited education and culture; not specially prepossessing in personal appearance, abrupt, rapid, sharp and colloquial in speech and manner, with no effort at finished or elaborate composition. The elements of his power seem to be chiefly a profound earnestness, simplicity and directness of address, with a vein of pathos and humor, giving a sprightly and tender cast to all he says. He illustrates points of personal experience by striking incidents, which often not only elucidate important truths, but impress them on the mind with great force. But in all this he has many superiors among the ministry in Europe and America. We cannot suppose these qualities to invest him personally with any great power over the immense audiences of refined and intelligent people whom he addresses. Some greater factor must be introduced before the problem of his success is solved. If we allow all that is claimed for what some denominate "mental magnetism," or the mysterious influence which orators exert over masses of men, still the explanation is unsatisfactory. We are forced to admit an element of mightier force. What is this mightier element? Is it that nameless psychological force which moves communities of men like the tides of the ocean? That which gave Peter the Hermit power over the thrones and populations of Europe? Is it religious enthusiasm? I think not. The temper of our times, the character of the people influenced, and the quiet intelligence which holds in restraint the turbulent fanaticism of former ages, renders this supposition improbable. A degree of enthusiasm will always attend a profound religious movement; but it is an effect, not a cause. Mistaken views of doctrine and duty may inflame weak minds, and excite to extraordinary labors, but such enthusiasm is always characterized by narrowness and bigotry. All sect or party enthusiasm—the esprit de corps which stimulates partisan zeal—is uncharitable, and never operates upon large masses of enlightened people. The present movement is catholic in spirit, evangelical in sentiment, and full of good fruits. All denominations of Christians join in it except those whose creed fences out all but their own communicants. The cool, critical Scotchman, the impulsive Irishman, and the sober, order-loving Englishman, are all alike enlisted in it. The mania of a sentiment, the enthusiasm of a cause, will not answer the demand. The Spirit of God is the only agent known to us capable of producing such tremendous results. With this explanation we are satisfied. The same power which astonished the Jewish and Gentile world on the day of Pentecost is still in the church, and, when the interests of evangelical religion demand it, exhibits its wonder-working energies.

If we admit "the power to be of God," the question of agencies sinks into one of minor importance. "Who, then, is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." Who, then, is Mr. Moody, and who is Mr. Sankey? It is a matter of indifference who they are, except that they are God's chosen instruments in the present work—the lay Paul and Apollos of this great revival.

Without seeking "to be wise above what is written," or presuming to interpret the purposes of God beyond what appears in the "signs of the times," we may, I think, safely infer that God intends a lesson for his people, and for the unbelieving world. I would suggest as some of the lessons which may be deduced the following:

1. That this great evangelical movement furnishes a kind of evidence that God's Spirit is in the world, "reproving it of sin, of righteousness and of judgment," which all the scientific infidelity and atheism of our times can neither "gainsay nor resist." It is an answer to Tyndall "on prayer," to Huxley on "the new life," and to Herbert Spenser on "a personal God," as articulate and as authoritative as if it had been uttered by the thunders of heaven.

2. It is as emphatic against the mummeries of ritualism as it is against the materialistic nonsense of the scientists. It is a most emphatic indorsement of the great doctrine of the New Testament and of the Reformation, the doctrine of "the priesthood of the people"—that which Mr. Wesley recognized in his "lay preachers." Christ was himself a layman, and he committed to his church as a whole, ministry and laity, the work of "preaching the gospel to every creature."

3. It illustrates the power of a simple ministry of truth—the plain preaching of the gospel—"repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." The "Jews require a sign," and "the Greeks seek after wisdom," and learned doctors strive to gratify them. "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty." God so works his wonders among men "that no flesh can glory in his presence." May his word still "have free course and be glorified."

W. G. E. C.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., May 17, 1875.

The Fraternal Messengers and Commissioners.

We find the following in the Southern Christian Advocate. Dr. Kennedy gives our views most completely. He says:

The press telegrams inform us that the Bishops, in discharge of the trust committed to them by our last General Conference, have made the following appointments: Fraternal messengers to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to meet in St. Louis, Mo., in 1876: Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., Rev. James A. Duncan, D. D., and Landon C. Garland, LL. D. For commissioners to treat concerning disputed property, with similar parties designated by the Methodist Episcopal Church: Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., Rev. R. K. Hargrove, D. D., Rev. T. M. Finney, D. D., Hon. Trusten Polk and Hon. David Clopton.

The announcement of these appointments will fall favorably upon the ear of the entire church, and will be regarded, in the main, as good as could have been made. Independent of more important considerations, there is a poetic propriety in the designation of Dr. Pierce for the distinguished position assigned him, which will be universally recognized. At present he exhibits wonderful vitality for one of his extreme age, and the church will not fail to pray that he may be spared to crown his illustrious life with this eminent service. Dr. Duncan possesses just the temper and tongue for the delicate duties to which he is called by the Bishops, and will do honor to his church by the manner in which he represents it on this interesting occasion. Dr. Garland, in intellect and devotion to the church, ranks a prince among our laymen, and is every way worthy to attend his distinguished clerical associates upon this important mission.

With a year's reflection and counsel the Bishops could not have made a more judicious selection for the leading position on the board of commissioners. Dr. Myers is thoroughly conversant with every phase of the property question, having studied its history and bearings more thoroughly perhaps than any other man in the connection. Of sound judgment, and by no means impracticable on the vexed questions to be adjudicated, he is at the same time not apt to lose his equilibrium under a tide of emotion that would sweep most men from their balance. Drs. Hargrove and Finney, the one from Missouri and the other from Tennessee, are familiar with the property question in its practical aspects, and are well qualified for the work to which they are called. Ex-Governor Polk and Hon. David Clopton, distinguished jurists, are zealous laymen, alive to all that concerns the welfare of their church, and eminently fit for a dispassionate and Christianly discussion and adjustment of the points in issue between the two Methodisms. On the whole, we think the selections made by the Bishops will be almost unanimously approved by the public opinion of the church. May divine wisdom direct in the contemplated negotiations, and may the issue redound to the glory of God and the increased prosperity of his church!

OUR CHURCH AT SAN JOSE.—While attending the District Conference at Rucker's chapel recently, says the Pacific Methodist, we found time to visit San Jose and see the new church erected on the corner of San Fernando and Second streets by our congregation. It is a handsome and imposing structure. The auditorium is forty by seventy feet, with a chancel eight by fourteen feet. The basement is commodious, with rooms in the rear for classes and a study for the pastor. The architects, Messrs. Birket & McKee, deserve praise for their beautiful plan, and the building committee, Bros. McCabe and William Lovell and Mrs. Dr. Stone, deserve the very highest commendation for the economy and skill they have shown in the construction of the house. Bro. Hopkins is a very modest man, and we forbear telling of his heroic endeavors and self-sacrificing labors in the undertaking. The truth is, the effort of building this beautiful temple has made the whole congregation heroic, from Father Hicks—who, we believe, is the Nestor—to the youngest of the Sunday school. How the ladies have labored and toiled and saved and invented! And with what pride they now look upon the fruition of all their work! We rejoice with them. They have the finest-looking church in San Jose and the finest in our connection on the coast. The auditorium is not yet quite completed, but when Conference meets in October they hope to have everything ready with the exception of furniture for this room.

THE revival at Centenary, in Lynchburg, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of May 13, continues with great power. Dr. Rosser has worked with untiring energy and with the zeal of an apostle. The ministerial brethren of that city have nobly labored for the good of souls, and upon them all God has sent rich blessings.

There is a good work in progress at our church in Manchester, under the labors of the pastor, Bro. McGee, assisted by Bro. White, of Coalfield circuit.

At Centenary, in this city, there are signs of a gracious revival. Several have been converted, and the meetings are increasing in interest.

Bro. Wright, at Wesley chapel, in Petersburg, Va., has concluded a series of services at his church, which resulted in over forty conversions.

Washington Street church, in Petersburg, has been blessed with fifty-two conversions. Bro. Duncan received forty-eight into the church.

From all parts of the church we continue to learn of seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The Spirit is demonstrating its work and power in an unusual degree—sinners are being saved and lukewarm Christians revived.

THE Pittsburg Christian Advocate, in an article on Ultramontanism or Vaticanism, closes with the following significant paragraph:

The state of affairs in Europe demands a passing notice. In England the government is providing for an army of 450,755 men for land service. These consist of regulars, militia, volunteers, enrolled pensioners, yeomanry and army reserve. The estimates for the navy are not yet made out. The army at home in England is much larger than at any time since 1810; and we may say that the whole continent of Europe is a camp. It resounds with preparation from east to west, from north to south. And all this preparation may be traced to Vaticanism. Shall our own country escape this outlay of money, and the restlessness arising from the disturbing character of Ultramontanism? The appointment of a cardinal and the election of a Roman Catholic senator from the great State of New York answer the question in the negative. Shall Protestants sleep any longer? God forbid. "Awake, thou that sleepest;" the enemy is thundering at the gates.

SUNDAY, MAY 9, was a red-letter day for the Presbyterians of New York. On its morning the successor of Dr. Adams, the Rev. W. J. Tucker, filled for the first time the pulpit of the Madison Square church. He comes from Manchester, N. H., and with a high reputation for oratorical power. On the same morning the Rev. Dr. John Hall's new church on Fifth avenue and Fifty-fifth street was dedicated. The edifice has some peculiarities which, for the benefit of building committees, we will here note. It is finished throughout in light wood, ash or oak. There is consequently no "dim religious light," a species of illumination with which Protestantism has properly no sympathy. A skylight running more than half the length of the auditorium gives light from above; in this, colored glass is used. For evening services, besides the reflectors in the ceiling, there are also reflectors attached to the side walls. Vents for the emitting of heat are placed in the floors of the pews. The galleries come well around to the pulpit, and are reached by staircases in the rear of the auditorium. The organ is high over the pulpit. The precentor's gallery, which is large enough to hold six or eight persons, hangs directly over the pulpit, so that its ceiling serves well as a sounding board. The aisles descend for about two-thirds of the depth of the auditorium, and then ascend again; why this is done, unless it be to symbolize the ups and downs of human life, we are at a loss to determine. The wall painting is mainly in sober tint, and harmonizes well with the shade of the wood. The whole effect is cheerful, and befits a cheerful, joyous Christianity.—Methodist.

PROGRESS AMONG THE INDIANS.—An intelligent clergyman, who has recently visited the reservations of the Choctaw, Chickasaw and Creek Indians, writes to the National Baptist, speaking in high terms of their general character. He found consistency of life and zeal for souls prevalent among them. The great body of them are poor, mainly because they have very little confidence that they will be able permanently to retain any country that they may improve. Thus a great motive to industry and accumulation is lacking among them. Two facts that this observer mentions are especially noteworthy—namely, the comparative freedom of these Indians from the vices and crimes which prevail in other parts of our country, and their temperance. On this last point the writer states that there is not a liquor saloon in all that more than sixty thousand square miles, nor among all the sixty thousand population dwelling there. And he pertinently asks: "Is the like of this to be found anywhere else in this land or in any other civilized land on the globe? This is Indian civilization; and in respect to temperance, as well as other morals of which we might speak, we claim it may shame all other civilizations that it has been our fortune to meet." Christian Intelligencer.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—At the April meeting of the board of managers of the American Bible Society one new auxiliary society was recognized in Texas. The board ordered the preparation of new plates for a reference Bible in agate type, 16mo, which will be published in the course of this present year, and will be known as the Centennial Bible. Corresponding plates in the Spanish language will be made at the same time. Numerous grants were made to auxiliary societies, missionary boards and individuals for distribution and sale at home and in foreign lands. The number of copies included in these grants is about 38,000, of the value of about $10,500. Funds were also granted to the amount of $3,340 for expenditure in Bible work in France, Bulgaria, China and Japan. The receipts for April were $18,373; copies issued, 55,702.

WE HAVE received the circular of Hiwassee College, also an invitation of the senior class to attend commencement exercises on May 27, 1875. We are glad to learn that the present year has been the most prosperous one in the history of the college. This institution is healthfully located in east Tennessee, and is under the care of the Holston Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. The president, Rev. J. H. Brunner, can be addressed: Hiwassee post-office, Monroe county, Tenn.

REV. H. P. LEWIS writes us of the death of a most estimable Christian lady. He says:

Mr. Editor: Sister Mary E. Howard, wife of Rev. P. Howard, of the Mississippi Conference, died near China Grove, Pike county, Miss., on the twenty-third instant, at three o'clock P. M. Sister Howard was born on the twenty-third of August, 1838, in Carroll county, Miss., and was married to Rev. P. Howard on the twenty-second of March, 1863. A more extended notice of her Christian life and triumphant death will be given in due time.

THE Northern Advocate, published for the Methodist Episcopal Church at Syracuse, N. Y., claims that it, with the New York Advocate and Western Advocate, are the only papers of the church which are paying expenses. The New York Advocate, with fifty thousand subscribers, shows a profit of only $10,000.

THE revival on the Santa Clara circuit, says the Pacific Methodist of May 7, is a glorious work of grace. We learn incidentally that the meeting has been moved from Rucker chapel to Cambria, and that many conversions have been reported. The work is of the soundest character.

THE physician in chief of the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane stated that over six hundred patients were admitted to that institution whose insanity was directly traceable to intemperance.

Books and Periodicals.

THE PEOPLE'S COMMON-SENSE MEDICAL ANVISER. By R. V. Pierce, M D.

This is a volume of over 800 pages, treating of physiology, the nature and treatment of the diseases to which human flesh is heir. Published at the World's Dispensary printing office and bindery, Buffalo, N. Y.

WHAT YOUNG PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW. By Burt G. Wilder. Boston: Estes & Laurnt.

Prof. Wilder is professor of comparative anatomy and zoology at Cornell University, and lecturer on physiology at the medical school of Maine. His book treats of the reproductive function in man and the lower animals. For grown young people it may be safe and useful. It is evidently prepared with care, and to subserve the interests of purity and health.

ST. NICHOLAS, Scribner's Illustrated magazine for girls and boys, has swallowed up The Little Corporal, The School-Day Magazine, The Children's Hour, Our Young Folks, and The Riverside Magazine. It stands now almost without a competitor, and is the finest illustrated periodical for the young published in America. The June number is splendidly illustrated, and has a marvelously rich and varied table of contents.

FROM John Church & Co., publishers of Church's Musical Visitor, Cincinnati, O., we have received the Song Premium and the Piano Premium, two volumes of music, offered as premiums to subscribers to the Musical Visitor. The volumes are handsomely bound, and the music is said to be excellent.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for June has: In the Latin Quarter, First-Born, a poem, The Mysterious Island, The Story of Seven Oaks, Beds and Tables, Stools and Candlesticks, A Visit to Benares, A Farmer's Vacation, Concerning Maxims, Recollections of Charles Sumner, and other articles. The illustrations in this number are numerous and generally good.

THE Journal of Agriculture for May is an excellent number. Published by the Journal of Agriculture Company, St. Louis. One dollar per annum.

Publisher's Department.

Look at the Letter List.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

OCEAN SPRINGS HOTEL.—We have never found a more pleasant watering-place, north or south, than Ocean Springs. We were not surprised, a few days since, to learn that every available house in the town had been engaged for the summer, with the exception of one which was just being fitted up. We are much pleased to learn that the accomplished proprietor, Mr. J. P. Longley, has opened the Ocean Springs Hotel for the season, and that those who wish to enjoy the best sea bathing and purest air on the sea shore can at the same time be well provided with the comforts and luxuries of life. Thousands will endure great fatigue to reach northern resorts, and after the exhaustion of a long trip will find themselves far less comfortable than those who breathe the pure airs of the gulf at Mr. Longley's spacious hotel. See advertisement.

SHOES AND BOOTS.—R. F. W. Bachman, at No. 18 Camp street, under the City Hotel, enjoys an enviable reputation as a fair and honorable dealer. Mr. Bachman has been known to us for many years, and we know of no dealer in any line of business that we take more pleasure in recommending. He has a large number of country customers—merchants, farmers and mechanics—who have learned to entrust him with filling their orders, and who have perfect confidence that all will be right, and are not disappointed. See his advertisement elsewhere.

THE State Line of steamships, running from New Orleans and New York to Belfast, and the White Star Line, sailing to Liverpool via Queenstown, are offering liberal inducements for European voyages. Their extraordinary accommodations, the fine condition of the vessels of these lines, and the freedom from serious accidents, indicate good management, and give assurances of safety to those who embark on them. From our excellent and very obliging fellow-citizens, A. K. Miller & Co., all further information may be obtained. See advertisement elsewhere.

D. H. WALLACE & CO.—This firm, so long and favorably known in the commission business, is still at 79 Carondelet street, where any of our readers who have produce to dispose of, or goods to purchase, may rest assured that their interests will be carefully attended to.

DRUG STORE.—Mr. P. L. Cusachs has removed his drug store to 37 Royal street, between Bienville and Customhouse. Mr. Cusachs is an experienced druggist, and has a long-established reputation for keeping fresh and pure drugs. See advertisement in another column.

WE NOTICE a change in the arrival and departure of trains on the Jackson route. Hereafter the express will depart at 8 A. M., instead of 7, and will arrive at 7.40 P. M., instead of 11, as heretofore. Travelers will note this fact.

RED SHOE STORE.—We call attention to the advertisement of Estoup's Red Shoe Store, at 382 and 384 Dryades street, near the Dryades Market. His shoes are marvelous for cheapness.

GROCERIES.—We call attention to the advertisement of the very complete grocery store of Mr. John L. Lavelle, No. 361 Dryades street, one door north of Erato.

TO NEW YORK IN TWO DAYS AND A HALF.—We see that the general ticket and passenger agents of the Pennsylvania, Pan-Handle, Cincinnati Short Line, Louisville, Nashville and Great Southern have agreed upon a plan of economizing time at way stations so as to make the time between this city and New York only a little over two days.

Passengers leaving New Orleans by the evening trains reach New York at 10.25 in the morning, instead of 7.35 in the afternoon, as heretofore; Baltimore 7.35 A. M.; Washington 9.02 A .M ; Philadelphia 7.35 A. M., and Boston 9.05 P. M., by rail only at this time, but will also connect with Long Island Sound steamers at their usual starting-time. This fast time from this city is made in connection with the train that arrives at Louisville at 3 A. M. and Cincinnati at 7.15 A. M.

In connection with the above fast time over the route mentioned, Pullman palace sleeping coaches will be run direct from this city to Cincinnati, arriving at Cincinnati, as mentioned, at 7.15 the second morning, making but one change from here to New York, and that change at Cincinnati, instead of Louisville, as heretofore. This shortening up of time over such a trunk route as above mentioned is a desideratum that the traveling community cannot but be thankful for.

THE TOLEDO BLADE.—The card of the Toledo (O.) Blade appears in another column of this issue. The Blade has attained an enviable reputation as one of the very best family papers in the land, and the enterprising and liberal spirit manifested by its publisher leaves no room to doubt that it will continue to maintain its supremacy in the future. It is carefully edited, and contains a number of special departments, affording much valuable information to the general reader. Price, $2 a year, postage free. J. P. Jones, publisher, Toledo, O.

INSURANCE.—We call attention to the twenty-sixth annual statement of the Crescent Mutual Insurance Company. Few companies in this or any other country have a better record than the Crescent, or a more reliable board of trustees or better officers. After paying a dividend of ten per cent on capital stock their net profits for the year amount to $62,133.12.

LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINE. M. S. Hedrick, Esq., at 103 Canal street, is identified with our earliest knowledge of sewing machines, and perhaps there is no man in the South who has furnished the people with more good machines than Mr. Hedrick. See advertisement of the Wilcox & Gibbs.

YEAST POWDERS.—We are informed by persons who have tested the Louisiana Yeast Powders manufactured by Thomas Egan, Esq., at No. 311 Common street, that they have given entire satisfaction.

Uniting Colonies.

It seems to be inherent in the honey-bee to be constantly employed, probably instinctively, in the several avocations that give employment to all the laborers in the hive. While there is honey to gather, in a pleasant, fine day for business there will be few idlers found about the hive except the drones. A colony that is favorably located and healthy will generally commence breeding so early in the season as to have a crowded hive by March, April, May or June, depending upon the latitude further north or south. In New England, reckoning from the southern to the northern part of the country embraced in those States, the swarms vary in their commencement from early in May at its southern parts to some time in June at the northern parts.

Divide the colony, when the hive is filled with bees, into three equal parts, placing each part in a hive, giving enough room for full stores for winter, for each of the three colonies, and very little surplus can be secured. Give in surplus boxes the same room that is embraced in the two additional hives, and let the colonies unite in their energies, gathering in one hive, and we obtain a surplus amounting to from seventy-five to two hundred pounds or more, depending upon the field and the season. It is very easily apprehended that three-fold energies, put forth in one hive instead of three, give these favorable results in surplus. With such arrangements made that the force from two or even three old colonies may be concentrated into one colony, with surplus boxes equally convenient for storing six hundred pounds of surplus in one hive, why may not that amount be taken from one hive, with the triple force of workers, just as readily as two hundred pounds by one-third of the force?

To secure this result it is only necessary to unite colonies in one hive (which is suited to this object, with only room in the breeding apartment for wintering the common product of the queen in the fall season) preparatory to winter. The one or two ailing colonies would be thus reduced by the transfer to one main colony. Might not the plan work favorably? I have so much confidence in it that I think the plan worth a trial. If one colony give two hundred pounds, why may not two colonies, with equal facilities, give four hundred pounds? Or why may not three colonies, thus united, give six hundred pounds? Each breeding department of each hive may go into winter quarters with its winter stores, or be fed if there was any lack, and be ready with full force to enter upon its harvest the next season.—Jasper Hazen, in the Country Gentleman.

WHY CLOVER IMPROVES THE SOIL. Prof. Vœlker thus explains the action of clover in increasing the fertility of the soil:

"All who are practically acquainted with the subject must have seen that the best crops of wheat are produced by being preceded by crops of clover grown for seed. I have come to the conclusion that the very best preparation, the best manure, is a good crop of clover. A vast amount of mineral manures is brought within reach of the corn crop, which otherwise remains in a locked-up condition in the soil. The clover plants take nitrogen from the atmosphere, and manufacture it into their own substance, which on decomposition of the roots and leaves produces abundance of ammonia. In reality the growing of clover is equivalent, to a great extent, to manuring with Peruvian guano."

Take, for instance, red clover, the best of all green manures. The great English chemist, Prof. Way, of the Royal Agricultural College, at Cirencester, made a perfect analysis of dry red clover, and found every one hundred parts to contain as follows:

Silicia,	0.50
Lime,	22.32
Magnesia,	4.08
Oxide of iron,	0.26
Potash,	25.54
Soda,	10.00
Chloride of potassium,	2.39
Chloride of sodium,	2.53
Carbonic acid,	23.47
Phosphoric acid,	6.71

SINGULAR PROPERTIES OF THE AUTUMNAL CROCUS (COLCHICUM AUTUMNALE.)—The strong resemblance of the Colchicum autumnale to the Crocus family, though it does not belong to it generically, will cause that popular name to cling to it in preference to that of Colchicum. This plant has been recently found to possess curious properties, which our readers will be interested to hear of and to experiment on. The flowers, without absolute contact, are found to communicate a bright saffron-yellow to the fingers when they are held over them at a certain distance, and the color so imparted remains permanently established for a considerable time, in spite of washing. The entire face, held over the flowers at a certain period of their development, assumes a jaundiced yellow of very pronounced character, upon which soap and water have no effect; but it generally disappears after a few hours, though in some instances it lasts much longer. The near proximity to these flowers affects also the palate—a slight but astringent bitter taste being very perceptible. Some constitutions are so sensitive to the influences given off by this plant that the ends of the fingers become perfectly numbed by actual contact with the flowers. But these influences rapidly disappear when the inflorescence has passed its zenith. As is well known, the flowers appear in August and September, without leaves, the foliage having developed itself in spring, and died down before the appearance of the flowers. The spring leaves also appear to possess very strong properties as well as the autumnal flowers.—London Garden.

LEAF AND FLOWER IMPRESSIONS. A correspondent of the Scientific American gives the following simple instructions for printing impressions of flowers and leaves: "Take a small quantity of printer's ink, thinly put it on glass, or on the lid of a blacking box, as I did, evenly distributed. The end of the index finger will serve as the printer's ball, to cover one side of the leaf uniformly; then lay it to the exact place where you wish the print to be; lay over it a thin, soft paper, large enough to cover it; then, without moving the leaf, press all parts of it with the end of the thumb firmly, and you will have a perfect impression, that no engraver can excel; and by adjusting the leaves at the proper points, accurate prints can be taken, and, added with the brush or pen, the stem and whole plant can be shown. I have excellent specimens of impressions of barks of trees, made by slicing the bark; and with a little care the stems can also be taken as well as flowers. I have many such; and when colored with the aniline colors they are like colored engravings.

CARTER'S GREEN GAGE TOMATO.—The Messrs. Carter say of this: "We have much pleasure in offering, for the first time, our new tomato, 'Carter's Green Gage.' It was exhibited before the fruit committee of the Royal Horticultural Society on Wednesday, October 7, 1874, and awarded a first-class certificate for its very fine flavor and clearly defined and distinct character. It is very prolific, bearing clusters of fruit of a beautiful citron color, irregularly penciled with steel-colored flakes on the upper surface, which renders it very ornamental. In a raw state it has the agreeable acid of an American cranberry, with a fine sugary flavor. This variety, selected by us at our own seed farms from Huthaway's Excelsior, is very early, and ripens readily in our English climate out of doors. It is quite distinct in color, form and flavor from any other tomato."—Gardeners' Monthly.

HABITS OF MOLES.—M. Flourens and other French naturalists have experimented with moles to ascertain their true habits. It has been found that they will starve to death in presence of abundant vegetable food, refusing to touch it, but that they will greedily devour cutworms, earthworms, mice, and even small birds, when nearly starving in an inclosed jar. Of the birds they only devoured the inside, but they devoured indiscriminately their own weight each day of snails, insects, larvæ, chrysalides, caterpillars, adders, glowworms and lizards. Mr. Carl Vogt relates an instance of a land proprietor in France who destroyed every mole upon his property. The next season his fields were ravaged with cutworms and his crops totally destroyed. He then purchased moles of his neighbors and stocked his fields, and afterward carefully preserved them as his best friends.

APPLE JOHN.—Pare, quarter and core enough apples to fill a three or four-quart crock. Make a batter a little thicker than for pancakes; put a layer of apples on the bottom of the crock, then pour over some of the batter; then another layer of apples, then batter, and so on until all is used; then put a thick soda crust on the top and bake three hours. To be eaten with a sweet sauce. Very nice.

MAY it not be said that happiness had a centrifugal attraction which diffuses us wholly without, detains us, dissipates us, would evaporate and restore us to the elements, if we wholly abandoned ourselves to it? Pain, on the contrary, if experienced at one point, brings back all to the center, knits closer, prolongs, insures and fortifies existence.—Michelet.

On Saturday the dispatches reporting sales of only 6,000 bales at Liverpool, and no change in quotations at either Liverpool or New York, except a slight improvement in futures at the latter, the market was extremely quiet at the opening. There was, however, some inquiry, and up to noon 500 bales had changed hands at easy prices, without any quotable variation, after which there was no material change, the additional transactions embracing 1,450 bales, making a total of 1,950 bales, against 3,100 prior to Friday. On Monday the market opened with a better feeling, inspired by the Liverpool dispatch which reported that market firmer, with sales of 12,000 bales, against only 6,000 on Saturday. The sales during the morning reached 1,000 bales, after which there were further transactions to the extent of 800 bales, making a total of 1,800. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a decline of $^1_{16}$c. in spots at New York, with a further falling off in futures, and Liverpool reported dull at previous rates. The inquiry was consequently limited, and up to 12.30 P. M barely 500 bales had changed hands, after which there were further sales of 150 bales, making the trifling total of 650 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,350 bales, against 4,700 for the corresponding time last week and 8,100 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 976,729 bales, against 1,183,772 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 280,082 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 283,781—3,401,913, against 3,685,694. In the exports from the United States, to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 15,369 bales to Great Britain, 39,810 to France and 183,822 to other foreign ports. NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from night to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday, the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $40, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner-load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees: William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Hickey, P. Italiaran, J. H. Keller, B. D. L. Bayne, G. W. W. Goodwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, May 26.—A Kansas City special to the Republican says: "Three hundred farmers of Jackson county met in Independence to-day to devise means to afford relief to the destitute and sufferiug. Reports from all parts of the county were that the grasshoppers were destroying all the crops and fruits.

"The meeting resolved to issue an address calling on the people of the county to assist the helpless. Farmers are cutting down trees for their stock to eat the leaves, straw being fed to cattle. One farmer said half of the farmers will be objects of charity in three months."

A meeting was held at Jefferson City last night to consider what can be done to render aid to the sufferers, and Gov. Hardin issued a brief address, setting forth that there was much destitution in various parts of the State, and asking the churches to take up contributions for the needy on the third of June, which has been proclaimed a day of fasting and prayer, and he asked that subscriptions be made by the benevolent throughout the State for the same purpose.

CLEVELAND, May 26.—In the morning session of the Presbyterian General Assembly to-day the report of the committee on foreign missions was received and discussed. The board asks for $545,000 for foreign missions for next year. It was agreed to publish the correspondence between the commissioners of the Northern and Southern General Assemblies in the appendix of the minutes.

In the Presbyterian General Assembly a resolution was adopted regretting that the negotiations relating to fraternal correspondence with the Southern Church had failed. The Assembly, however, deem it inexpedient to press the question through another committee, and at the same time expresses unequivocally its confidence in the integrity and Christian character of the brethren of the Southern Church.

BALTIMORE, May 27.—The twenty-seventh biennial session of the synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church is now being held here. The reports show there are over a hundred thousand members and seven hundred ministers.

The ninety-second annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, diocese of Maryland, is in session. Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, and Bishop Whittingham, have failed to take action arraigning the rectors of Calvary church.

ST. LOUIS, May 30.—After two days' argument and discussion of the Wilson case in the Presbyterian General Assembly, a vote was reached last night. The question was on sustaining the complaint of J. J. Cook against the Louisville Presbytery, and the vote resulted as follows: Sustained in part, 38; not sustained, 67.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 30.—Forty buildings, including a number of business houses, were burned today. Loss, $250,000.

ST. LOUIS, May 31.—In the Presbyterian General Assembly to-day, on motion the headquarters of the committee of foreign missions was transferred from Columbia, S. C., to Baltimore. An effort to change the sent of the committee on sustentation from Columbia to Baltimore failed.

Dr. Girardeau was unanimously elected to the chair of didactic and polemic theology of the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C.

LONDON, May 29.—Twenty-five hundred persons perished in Asia Minor during the earthquake.

The Prince of Wales, the Marquis of Tweeddale and Gen. John Fitzgerald are gazetted as field marshals.

The Duke of Wellington has granted the use of Wellington Riding School for revival purposes.

The revival meetings of Moody and Sanky continue to attract thousands of persons, and great numbers continue to become converts. The movement is regarded as most remarkable.

SENOR CASTELAR TO THE RECTOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MADRID.—Emilio Castelar has addressed the following letter to the rector of the University of Madrid:

"I am a partisan of liberty and law. As soon as, in the course of historic events, I see a sect attack the principles of freedom I combat it. That course is now of exceptional importance, especially since the decrees of the Vatican Council have imprinted on the church a stamp of absolutism full of danger for political institutions. Never shall I advise that this absolutism should be opposed by force; for its semi-Asiatic power is based on the human conscience, in the moral depth of which authority does not penetrate. But as a man—as a member of one of those associations which are called universities, and which represent eternal science—I demand that to estimate and judge those institutions should be left that plenitude of intellectual liberty which I received from nature and which the law has sanctioned. As long as I do not possess that full and entire freedom I shall not renounce my chair, the inalienable rights of which are constantly menaced by the purely administrative powers of the first comer who happens to be minister at the moment."

LABOR is the law of the world, and he who lives by other men's means is of less value to the world than the buzzing, busy insect.

From the Work.

ALEXANDRIA AND PINEVILLE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Church Conference met by appointment at nine o'clock A. M.

The Rev. C. Keener read a letter from J. B. Walker, D. D., presiding elder of the New Orleans district, stating that Bishop Paine, owing to the death of Rev. John Wilkinson, had transferred C. Keener to Baton Rouge, and Thomas Mullett from Rapides circuit to Alexandria and Pineville.

R. J. Bowman Esq., proposed the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That while we submit with resignation to the dispensation which has deemed it to the interest of the church to take our minister, C. Keener, to another field of labor, it is with the deepest regret and profoundest sorrow that we witness his removal from us.

Resolved, That our church in Pineville and Alexandria is the result of his faithful and able ministry, and we will ever cherish his memory with that love and reverence which is due to one to whom we owe our beginning.

Resolved, That we tender him, in the new field of labor to which he is called, our warmest sympathy for his success and happiness, our warmest love for his faithful ministry of three years among us, and our constant prayers that when his course is finished he may be able to exclaim with that Christian warrior of old who bore the marks of many a hard-fought fight: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

R. J. BOWMAN, Sec.

PINEVILLE, LA., May 19, 1875.

CLOVER HILL CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor: Our second Quarterly Conference was held last Saturday, the fifteenth. Our presiding elder made us glad with his presence this time. (He failed, on account of high water, at our first.) The Conference passed off pleasantly on Saturday, with but few members present. We appointed a committee of five active members on church building, which is a move in the right direction. On Sabbath the presiding elder preached to a large and attentive audience from Revelations xxii, 17. Oh, if we could have such a sermon as that was every Sabbath, how much easier it would be to "keep ourselves in the love of God!"

We raised $12 for the Bishops—the amount assessed. Our finances at the end of the second quarter (May 15) stand as follows: For presiding elder, $20; for preacher in charge, $149.05; for missionary, $15; for Bishops, $12; for Sunday school, about $11; for the mission church in Vicksburg, $4.

Crop prospects are fine; health good; river falling fast; weather pleasant.

May the blessings of God rest on this people this year. Our Sunday school is still growing in interest, and the Temperance Society is taking deeper root in the community.

T. B. WALDEN, P. C.

MAYERSVILLE, Miss., May 22, 1875.

COLUMBIA, LA.—Mr. Editor: Our second quarterly meeting for Columbia came off on the fifteenth and sixteenth of this month, and was protracted until Wednesday night. The result was very encouraging to the lovers of Zion. Some nine persons were added to the church, and about the same number found peace in receiving the Savior. The interest here is not of a spasmodic or momentary character, but has taken deep hold upon the heart of all classes of the community. The church is alive—a band of workers. Bro. Wynn, the pastor, already has the confidence of the entire community. With the religious state of feeling now existing, and such hearty co-operation of his church, we expect the good work to go on, and that he will be able to bring in a good report for the Master. J. H. STONE.

COLUMBIA, LA., May 20, 1875.

P. S.—We raised $11.15 for foreign missions on Sabbath. J. H. S.

COLUMBIA, LA.—Mr. Editor: Bro. Stone gave you a short account of our quarterly meeting, which was held in the town of Columbia, and resulted in an addition of nine members to the church, and fully as many conversions.

On the following Sabbath Bro. J. S. Davis preached at Trione, four miles above Columbia, and, as usual, held prayer meeting at night. The power of God came down, and several were happily converted, his youngest son among the number.

The next night we held prayer meeting again, and the result was glorious. At the two prayer meetings, and through the day Monday about twelve persons were converted and eight members added to the church.

Up to date we have received twenty-one persons into our branch of the fold, and about the same number have been brought into the spiritual fold of the great Shepherd.

May thousands this year be brought to Christ within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference.

JOHN F. WYNN.

APRO. 26, 1875.

FRANKLIN, LA.—Mr. Editor: I am glad to say that some religious awakening has taken place in Franklin. Two weeks of protracted effort, with the able assistance of Bros. Cobb and Mathews a part of the time, and Bro. Sawyer during the whole of the latter week, has considerably aroused some of us from our lethargy. Only a few have professed conversion and joined the church, yet a general impression for good has doubtless been made, and, if properly followed up, will doubtless yield fruit in days to come.

Yours truly,

J. W. MEDLOCK.

HOW TO MAKE CLOTH TENTS.

To construct a tent for a family of six or eight persons, proceed as follows:

1. Select the site, and grade a space twelve feet square to an exact level.

2. Plant three posts for each side of the tent, and nail a board on the bottom, and a strip along at a height say of just five feet. The board at the bottom will prevent the necessity of bringing the cloth to the ground, thereby exposing it to mildew, and the strip at the eaves is the plate. The space between may be filled with cloth running longitudinally.

3. Take forty yards of such factory cloth as you shall want for family use subsequently, and divide it into eight equal strips of five yards each. Then run four strips together, and you have the first roof, which you are to throw over the ridge-pole, and draw down, and tack to the plate.

4. The other four strips run together in the same way to make the second roof, or fly. This you throw over the first roof, and let it rest on it at the ridge; but the eaves are to be fastened in another way, to wit: Hem the cloth at the eaves, and insert a small scantling or pole. Then attach a cord to the pole at each corner and at each seam. These cords are to be fastened to stakes so as to strain the cloth well, and raise it at the eaves say about one foot above the other roof. Let the ridge pole be just four feet higher than the plates; or, if more "pitch" of roof is desired, it can be obtained by building the tent narrower—say eleven, or even ten; however, if built upon the above plan it will shed rain perfectly if thoroughly constructed.

The above is taken from the "Camp Meeting Manual," published by H. V. Degen. RENWOD.

Increased Missionary Collections.

MR. EDITOR: I am rejoiced to find that some are anxious to see the church doing something worthy of itself in the missionary cause, and also to know that some parts of our connection are aroused to action in this matter.

The whole of the Brookhaven district, consisting of thirteen appointments, gave $280.35 for the cause of missions last year (Minutes of 1874.) Up to this date I can furnish reports from two of these thirteen. About one month since Rev. H. F. Johnson made an address at Hazlehurst, and took up a collection amounting to $170, besides $60 in the Sunday school. On last Sunday there was an address by the same gentleman at this place, and a collection amounting to $17 in cash and $133 in good subscriptions. Bro. Johnson has been at work in this cause at other points, but at these two places alone the collections amount to more than the whole district last year, as shown by the Minutes of 1874, and these have not finished paying yet. Brethren, let us take up double the amount, at least, of last year. H. S.

BROOKHAVEN, May 25, 1875.

THE Reformed Episcopal Church last week completed its articles of religion, and elected Rev. Lutane and Rev. Dr. Nicholson as missionary bishops. Dr. Nicholson is at present rector of the Reformed Episcopal church in Philadelphia.

Our Mission in China.

In answer to intelligent and interested inquiries from Georgia and Missouri, we give a condensed statement of our mission work in China. We are glad to be questioned about our missionary work, and happy to answer definitely and explicitly.

We have two American missionaries in the field—the Rev. J. W. Lambuth and the Rev. Young J. Allen. Bro. Lambuth is superintendent of the mission, and has co-operating with him five native preachers, who occupy stations at Soochow, Shanghai, Nazlang and Karding. At three of these places we have church buildings and established congregations. At Soochow we rent a place for preaching. We have two other native preachers who have been laboring, one of them with the Presbyterian mission at Soochow, and one with the English Methodists at Tientsin. We propose to employ these two men so soon as we can procure funds. Our plan is to enlarge the native agency. With a few foreign missionaries to superintend the work, we are confident of native preachers enough for expansion. Bro. Lambuth, beside visiting monthly to all these stations, and traveling and preaching extensively elsewhere, is biblical professor to all these native preachers—is engaged in preparing, printing and circulating tracts and books—has under his care two boarding schools and one day school, viz.: a boys' boarding school at Soochow, and a boarding school for girls and a mixed day school at Shanghai. You readily perceive that the work of this man is intense and immense activity; while for ten years every plan and project for advancement has been dwarfed, and his heart made sore because we have not been able, in the annual meetings of the board, to see our way clear to appropriate the funds asked for and demanded by the work; and, what has been more harassing, we have not been able to remit at regular intervals or in full the amount appropriated.

Bro. Lambuth proposes to establish a new station at Qumsaw, a city between Shanghai and Soochow. All the points mentioned are considerable cities—all, with the exception of Karding, larger than Nashville. A round of monthly meetings involves on the superintendent travel of over six hundred miles by oar and sailboats and wheelbarrow. To accomplish all this work the board has only been able to appropriate in our currency $7,500. Salary of superintendent and five native preachers, $2,850; two Bible women, $160; rent of chapel at Soochow, $250; three schools, $2,000; three teachers, $300; enlarging girls' boarding school, $500; building church in Karding, $500; sexton, and books and tracts, $440. Change this from currency into Mexican silver dollars, and you have the value of these amounts in China. Where else on earth can you do so much labor with so little expense? Mrs. Lambuth, without any salary, is a most efficient helper in the schools and work of the Bible women. Bro. Allen is a professor in a government college, receives his pay from the Chinese government, and has generously released us from all payment of salary to him. Though, beside his work in translating and teaching for the Chinese government, he preaches every Sabbath, or oftener, in connection with our mission work, has a day school under his supervision, and is editor of the Chinese Globe Magazine, containing thirty-six pages. The Rev. W. A. P. Martin, D. D., LL.D., president of the Peking University, calls it the Great Pastor—equal to five missionaries. To aid this magazine, which reaches all classes in China, and has a circulation of 94,000, we this year appropriate $500. Heretofore Bro. Allen has assumed all risk and expense as well as labor—and what labor! We thank God that he has given us two such laborers.

It is asked further: Is it intended to re-enforce the mission this year? We answer: Three young men who are highly recommended are ready to go. The Bishop in charge of the mission is ready to take into consideration these applications, and, if found satisfactory, to appoint them. He regards the sending out of one recruit at this juncture highly important, and asks: Can the funds be procured? The secretaries reply: We know of but one way in which you can be justified in sending another man this year, viz.: If a Conference or individual will undertake the support of such missionary for two years, then, and only then, can we see our way clear. In the event that a Conference can say we will take a missionary's salary for two years, this must be outside of the assessment on said Conference. A single man can be supported on a yearly salary of $750. Will either of the Conferences from which men are ready to go say we will be responsible for your support for two years?

Mrs. Lambuth, the earnest missionary wife of our superintendent, is daily expected to reach this city. Her visit might be utilized to procure the funds, and the man appointed might return with her. We will be glad to answer other questions. I put before the eye, in closing, a schedule:

China Mission.—Foreign missionaries, 2; native missionaries, 5; native teachers, 3; Bible women, 3; schools, 4; pupils, 61. Mission stations, 5—Shanghai, Soochow, Karding, Nazlang, Qumsaw. Churches, 3, and 1 rented house; church members, 86 (not including probationers); periodicals published, 1; books and tracts, indefinite; whole amount appropriated for the work for 1875 76, $7,500, including church building, repairs, etc.

D. C. KELLEY,

FEMALE COLLEGE AND OTHER MATTERS.

MR. EDITOR: The board of managers of the Mansfield Female College, at a meeting held on the thirteenth instant, unanimously elected Thomas Armstrong as president of the college for another year. The board has also had the college property insured for $10,000.

The president presented to the board his programme for commencement exercises, to be held the last of next month, and among other things to be done the Rev. A. E. Goodwyn is to preach the commencement sermon; and the Hon. Mr. Seay, of Shreveport, is to deliver the literary address to the graduating class.

The college is doing well considering the oppressed state of the country. A part of the contract made by the board with the president is that he is to educate the daughters of the traveling preachers of the Louisiana Annual Conference in the regular course free of tuition cost, and three of them in the entire course. This should be a sufficient incentive to influence the preachers to use extra efforts in presenting its claims to the public, and to secure for it a greater amount of patronage.

We are having fine seasons, and the prospect for crops was never better; also an abundant fruit crop of almost every kind. We ought to be very grateful and do better. In the East they have been wrecked by storm and flood, and in the West the grasshopper has eaten them up, while we in the midst have been peculiarly spared.

We are having a quiet and pleasant time on our circuit, and hope that we will have a revival to report before the year closes.

JOHN PIPES.

MANSFIELD, LA., May 20, 1875.

THE New York Observer, commenting upon the dissatisfaction expressed by the disciples of John Stuart Mill with the qualified recognition of a divine existence expressed in writings published since his death, adds:

"It is rather humiliating to them, when they had supposed that they were sure at least of Mr. Mill, to find that he is slipping out of their hands. We think they ought to have been satisfied when he conditions divine goodness on divine infirmity, and patronizes the Creator rather reluctantly on the ground that he did the best he could when he made a very clumsy and ill-constructed world. The Westminster Review, however, disputes the force of his reasoning. It says: 'Deservedly great as is his authority, and naturally disposed as we are to feel its persuasive force, we think we see good reason for questioning not only the correctness of this inference, but for dissenting from the general estimate of the design argument which he has placed before us. The genius, the philosophical power, the logical acuteness, the religious (?) aspiration of Mr. Mill have not, in our judgment, enabled him to rescue natural theology from the fate which appears likely to overtake it.' We must leave Mr. Mill in the hands of his friends, to do with him as they like. They may cast him out if they will, but, if so, he will bear off with him a good share of that atheistic unanimity in which his school seem so much to have prided themselves. They are evidently weakened by such a secession, and they may perhaps find it best, before going much further, to settle, on some better ground than they have yet indicated, the question which Mr. Mill has raised."

THE series of revival meetings in this city (Memphis,) conducted by Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, with the aid of the pastors and leading laymen of the evangelical denominations, is still in progress. An immense number of people attend—so many that the place of meeting has been changed to the Exposition building for the accommodation of the multitude. Much good, we trust, has been done, though as yet not many persons have professed conversion. We pray that a general interest may soon be manifest among us. Mr. Bliss, whose singing was a great attraction to many, left on Tuesday last, to meet an engagement elsewhere. Mr. Whittle remains, and will be with us for some time if the progress of the good work justifies it. Such a union of hearts as Christians of our city are now showing we have not seen at any previous period.—Western Methodist, May 29.

SIX national camp meetings are advertised: Washington, D. C. (Tabernacle,) May 30; Fernwood, near Philadelphia, June 23; Cedar Rapids, Iowa, July 8; Urbana, Ohio, July 22; Orchard Beach, Maine, August 5; Newburg, N. Y., August 25.

Books and Periodicals.

A GROUP OF POETS AND THEIR HAUNTS. By James A. Harrison. Hurd & Houghton, New York; H. O. Houghton & Co., Boston: the Riverside Press, Cambridge.

The author, Prof. Harrison, is the son of our well-known merchant and citizen, J. P. Harrison, recently deceased. He fills at present the professorship of Latin in Randolph-Macon College, Virginia, and but a few weeks ago was elected to the chair of modern languages in the Vanderbilt University. The volume comprises a series of papers on the following writers and subjects: 1. The Sorrows of Home. 2. Italian Haunts of Lord Byron. 3. An Aquarelle of Boccaccio. 4. The Rome of the Marble Faun. 5. In Tasso's Garden. 6. Beneventum—a leaf from a diary. 7. A Vendee of the Vikings. 8. A Swedish Improvisatore. 9. Jasmin the Troubadour. 10. Beranger. 11. Andre Chenier. 12. Alfred De Musset. 13. Boisdelaise.

Mr. Harrison has much of the spirit of poetry in his own nature, he has traveled extensively, visiting the scenes which he describes, and is thoroughly conversant with the languages and literature of modern Europe. He writes con amore, in perfect sympathy with his themes, and with that fullness of information which the undertaking demands for its satisfactory execution. His insight of character, critical acumen, and power of appreciating and exhibiting the most subtle and delicate elements, and shades of thought and sentiment, are remarkable. The style is rich in imagery, exuberant, overflowing with descriptive beauties, but never tawdry or commonplace. The publishers very truly say: "Reading, travel, observation, criticism, are drawn upon in the production of these literary miniatures, and it is seldom that a book issues from the American press so charged with a fine feeling for artistic literature." If there is any room for adverse criticism it is that the moral delinquencies of some of these men of genius are treated with too much leniency, and sometimes in an apologetic tone. They are noted and condemned, but perhaps not with as much emphasis as they should be. We have found the book an exceedingly fascinating one—fresh, instructive and entertaining. It will prove a delightful treat to all who can appreciate literary excellence and the beautiful in art. As the work of a young Southern author, it does honor to our section of the country, and we doubt not it will meet with a hearty welcome, and have a wide and permanent circulation. We believe that a limited edition only has been printed, and copies should be secured at once.

THE New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal for May has been received. This able journal, edited by Dr. S. M. Bemiss, and published by James A. Gresham, deserves an extensive patronage. To medical practitioners in the South it is invaluable. Published bi-monthly, at $5 per annum.

THE American Artisan is a publication of great merit. It is the best journal in its special departments of science, mechanics, inventions and art that we are acquainted with. The May number is a very superior one. Published by Brown, Allen & Co., New York. Price, $2.25 per annum.

MAP-DRAWING MADE EASY is the title of a little work by James Monteith, published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. It contains written exercises, and is admirably adapted for its purpose. Price, eighteen cents.

PETERSON'S LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE for June is filled with fashion plates and light literature, and also with practical information for housekeepers. Published by Charles J. Peterson, Philadelphia. $2 a year.

THE Way of Holiness is the title of a new monthly sheet published at Albany, Ga. Willis M. Russell and George J. Griffiths, editors. Price, $1.25 per annum.

THE Reformed Episcopal Church Council was in session at Chicago, May 22. The General Synod of the Reformed Church of America sent a delegate to extend its official and Christian greeting. This is the first official recognition given to this church. Last Monday two additional missionary bishops were elected—Dean Edward Hodges, of British Columbia, and Rev. James A. Latane, of Wheeling, W. Va.

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1875.

TEACH ME TO LIVE.

Teach me to live! 'Tis easier far to die
Gently and silently to pass away—
On earth's long night a dreamless slumber lie,
Than wake in the eternal glorious day.

Teach me that joy—for lesson how to live
To serve thee in the darkest paths of life;
Arm me for conflict and fresh vigor give,
And make me a—— than conqueror in the strife.

Teach me to live! 'Tis self and sin no more:
But use the time remaining to me yet,
Not mine own pleasure seeking, as before,
Wasting no precious hours in vain regret.

Teach me to live! No killer let me be,
But in thy service whate'er my employ,
Prepare to do this duty cheerfully—
Be this my highest—truly holiest joy.

Teach me to live—thy daily cross to bear,
Nor murmur though I bend beneath its load,
Only be with me. Let me feel thee near
Thy smile sheds gladness on the darkest road.

Teach me to live!—and find my life in thee
Looking from earth and earthly things away,
Let me not falter, but untiringly
Press on, and gain new strength and power each day.

Teach me to live, with kindly words for all—
Wearing no cold, repulsive brow of gloom:
Waiting, with cheerful patience, till the call
Summons me to my heavenly rest and home.

The Rev. Eugene V. LeVert.

As has already been announced through the press, this veteran servant of God breathed his last, in Marion, Ala., April 19, 1875. He was born in King William county, Va., October 20, 1795. His father, Dr. Claudius LeVert, was a Frenchman by birth, and came to America as flag sergeant in DeRochambeau's army. He afterward entered upon the practice of medicine, but died in the prime of life, leaving a wife and seven children. After the death of his father the subject of this sketch apprenticed himself to a carpenter in the city of Richmond, where he labored at his trade till the breaking out of the war in 1812. Being of a chivalrous disposition, he entered the army in an artillery company, which was stationed at Charleston, S. C. Having served six months as a soldier—the time for which he enlisted—he returned home, and with his mother's family moved to Russell valley, Ala., and in partnership with an older brother began business as cabinet workmen in the town of Huntsville. On the thirteenth day of September, 1819, he was happily converted to God while kneeling at the root of a large tree, and immediately after this occurrence he joined the Methodist Church. From this time forth he was a new creature. His conversion was thorough, satisfactory and powerful. Soon after experiencing a change so wonderful he felt called of God to the work of the ministry; and, though a very timid man, he debated the matter only a sufficient length of time to satisfy him as to the proper course of duty. On the twentieth of July, 1821, he was licensed to preach, and was employed immediately by his presiding elder, the Rev. Thomas Nixon, on the Jones Valley circuit. At the close of this year he was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, which then embraced the Territories of Alabama and Mississippi. When the appointments were read out he was announced as junior preacher under Samuel Patton, on the Tuskaloosa circuit. Having proved himself to be an efficient preacher by the labors of this year, he was placed the next year in charge of the Alabama circuit, where he labored with such indefatigable zeal that his health gave way, and he was compelled to retire from active service for the next two years.

In the fall of 1825, his health having improved, he again entered the Conference and was assigned to the New River circuit, and the next year he had charge of the Cahaba Valley circuit. At the end of this year, from excessive labors, his health had again failed, and he reluctantly retired the second time from active Conference duties.

Some of the older ministers yet living know that circuits in those days were almost as large as districts now are. The work to be done by a circuit preacher at that time was immense, and required constant travel, and preaching almost every day in the week. Such was the labor which Bro. LeVert performed. He often rode all day, through snow or rain, without a morsel to eat from breakfast till night, and several times in his life he traveled through such days, and at night lay down supperless at the root of some spreading oak, and rested his head upon his saddlebags, while his bed was made of an overcoat and saddle blanket. For these physical hardships he received but little pecuniary compensation. The whole amount received one of these years was one dollar and twenty-five cents; and the fifth of this was given to him by an old colored woman who delighted to listen to his preaching.

Having improved his health by a year's rest, he re-entered the Conference in the fall of 1828. From this time on to the day of his death his name remained on the Conference roll, and up to the year 1832 he had traveled the Tuskaloosa, Ocmulgee and Marion circuits. At the end of this year the Conference was divided into the Mississippi and Alabama Conferences, and he, having chosen the latter, was placed upon the Tuskaloosa district. From this time to the year 1872 he traveled circuits, filled stations and presided over districts with great usefulness and acceptability. Greensboro, Marion, Summerfield, Uniontown, Dayton, Macon and Glenville have all shared in the benefits of his ministry. As a presiding elder the Tuskaloosa, Greensboro, Selma and Demopolis districts remember him kindly and affectionately. In 1840 he represented his Conference at the General Conference held at Baltimore, where he stood up manfully against the tide that was then rising between the Methodists North and South.

In stature he was about six feet high; his appearance was commanding, his face symmetrical, his features bold and manly, his eye keen and expressive, and his mouth was the ready expression of fluency. In his latter days he was rather inclined to corpulency. He was generally cheerful, though at times, of late years, he appeared to be rather gloomy, which was mainly owing to the fact that he was unable to work, and consequently was generally confined at home, to which he was unaccustomed. He was naturally endowed with a strong mind, and had he enjoyed the advantages of an early education he might have been second to none in literary attainments. About three months in a country school was the extent of his early advantages, except a rudimentary knowledge of the French language, which his father taught him when a very small boy. Though his early training was thus limited, by diligent application he gained a wonderful store of information. His knowledge of theology was extensive, accurate and rich, and his acquaintance with nearly all subjects was extensive and diversified. He was an original and independent thinker. His mind was very active and strictly logical, his imagination was vivid, and his memory remarkable. He was fond of reading, but did not read indiscriminately; his selections were from the best authors, and he utilized much of what he read.

As a preacher he was evangelical, earnest and eloquent. His talents were far above mediocrity. In the pulpit his person was attractive, his actions deliberate, his manner graceful and earnest, his language gorgeous, his voice pleasant, and his elocution faultless. It was in the pulpit that he exhibited his greatest powers. His sermons were the result of careful preparation. He brought forth out of his treasury things new and old. At times, when his soul was fired with his theme, his glowing sentences would take fire and burn at white heat, and he, standing transfigured before his hearers, would pour forth the anathemas of a violated law and the awful scene of the judgment till they would appear as terrible realities. Those who enjoyed the pleasure of listening to him when in the vigor of life pronounced him one of the most powerful preachers they ever heard. Thousands have listened with almost breathless silence to his impassioned discourses, and hundreds have been awakened and brought to Christ through his instrumentality. The church in middle Alabama is more indebted to him as a minister than any other of his day. For nineteen years of his ministry he filled the place of presiding elder, during most of which time he seemed to have been set for the defense of the doctrines peculiar to Methodism. In the field of debate he was a powerful and successful polemic, and sometimes, when logical truth failed to convince his opposers, he would turn upon them with such a volley of sarcasm as would put to silence his most violent antagonists.

On the twenty-third of January, 1823, he was married to Miss Martha Patton, by whom he had fifteen children, only six of whom now survive him. The mother of his children having died, July 9, 1846, he was afterward married to Mrs. Fletcher, widow of Dr. Fletcher, of Perry county, Ala. In 1872, while stationed at Glennville, his wife's health failed, and he returned with her to Marion, Ala., where, on the third day of November, of the same year, she died. This proved to be his last appointment, for at the next session of the Conference he was superannuated. He seemed to have lost the use of his lower limbs to some extent, and his partial paralysis made it unpleasant and inconvenient for him to be moved any distance from home, though he continued to preach with his usual earnestness and eloquence as opportunity was afforded him. His last sermon was preached at Newbern, and on that day he filled the pulpit three times, and preached an elegant discourse each time.

For several months previous to his death there were visible indications of his approaching dissolution. The extreme feebleness of his lower limbs, and the bending form of his body as he was occasionally seen on the streets, seemed to say that his race was well-nigh run. He had occasional attacks of paralysis, which made him fear to leave home; for he seemed to feel, and often expressed the feeling, that he would die suddenly. Whenever he felt able he was at church on Sabbath morning, and always when present he closed the services with prayer, which for earnestness and appropriateness was peculiar to himself.

His last visit to the church was at the time of our last quarterly meeting. At the close of the morning sermon he was called upon to administer the communion. He arose, trembling with feebleness, and made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion, prayed the consecration prayer, and then gave the elements to the ministers present. It was a time not soon to be forgotten. This was his last official act. On Tuesday after he complained of a trouble about his heart, saying to his son, who was going off on business: "Don't stay long, my son, for I feel unusually unwell to-day." On Wednesday morning about three o'clock he was attacked with violent pain in the region of his heart, which continued till some time in the day on Thursday. After this he seemed to be better, except occasionally he would have sinking or fainting sensations. All the while he felt premonitions of his approaching end, and frequently said to his children that he felt that he was "on the verge of the river, and would soon be on the other shore." The day before he died his consciousness of the near approach of death grew stronger, and he said to his daughter: "I may live to see the morrow's sun rise, but I don't think I shall see his setting." The next morning he appeared much better, and ate a piece of toast and drank some milk, remarking that it was very good. But soon after eating he complained of feeling worse, and expressed a desire to see the doctor, who came in about that time; and while feeling his pulse and counting with him he threw his hand over his heart, the pulsations ceased almost instantly, and without a struggle or groan he passed into the scenes of a bright future.

Thus has passed away an honored hero of the cross, who for more than a half century has gone in and out before the people, ministering to them the consolation of that grace which finally gave him triumph in the dying hour. He died in the midst of his brethren, surrounded by children and friends, who carried his remains to the Marion cemetery, and there deposited them to rest till the resurrection morn.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last
His soul is found in peace.

"Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy."

Obituaries.

REV. DUGALD CARMICHAEL.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes my mournful duty to inform you of the death of the above-named brother, which took place at his residence in Dallas county, Ala., April 15, 1875. I learn from his bereaved wife that he was born in Marion district, S. C., May 7, 1820. He must have joined the church in early life, as the perfect fruit of maturer age gave token of early planting. He was licensed to preach in 1844, and joined the Alabama Conference in 1846. For twenty-one years he was a faithful and efficient itinerant, serving the church upon missions, circuits and stations, and as presiding elder of the Camden district for four years. As a preacher he was clear, comprehensive and logical, aiming more at permanent usefulness than the ephemeral fame of a brilliant orator. Under a false impression, doubting his willingness cheerfully to comply with itinerant requirements, he was located, during his absence, at the session of the Mobile Conference in 1867. This action ever afterward was to him a source of grief, and in obedience to his heart's desire he would have returned to his brethren in the regular work had not gradually failing health for fifteen years foreshadowed his approaching end. And yet, though many years a victim of disease, and conscious of approaching dissolution, when the summons came he was aware that "the feast was ready." While eating dinner at home, surrounded by his family, the Master called him, no doubt, to sup in heaven at night. And thus he passed to the bosom of his God without a word declarative of his triumph and consolatory to his family. But a life of godliness must needs break upon the eternal shore, and the legacy of an honored name and the charm of holy character, adorned and beautified by clustering virtues, must shed a glow of consolation where sorrow hangs its drapery. We knew him but a short while, but "to know him was to love him." Such meekness, such patience, such Christ-likeness as he manifested during his sufferings would have won a savage to his breast. Truly can we say of him, as was said of Dr. Doddridge: he needed not a process of reasoning to convince him that in his afflictions a Father's gentle hand was on him for good. The eye of faith instantly saw it, and a heart at peace with God, with the world and with itself joyfully responded: "Even so, Father, for so it pleaseth thee." But we forbear. To eulogize the sainted dead is among our feeblest efforts. He leaves a wife and seven children, the oldest of whom, a local preacher on our circuit, bears his father's name, and, we trust, will wear his mantle. RITCHIE J. BRIGGS.

MRS. SALLIE K. STEINBACK, consort of Mr. J. L. Steinback, and daughter of Dr. and Sallie E. Tradewell, was born in Holmes county, Miss., September 15, 1853. She was educated at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss.; was married April 20, 1870, and died April 8, 1875. Sister Steinback professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1869. An incident in the experience of the writer, never to be forgotten: the being attracted, in the midst of a discourse, by a strange face in the congregation, and the feeling of a special message for that one soul. At the close of the discourse penitents were invited, and the person of this strange face, eliciting such peculiar interest, came weeping to the altar and professed religion. I afterward knew her well. She was a lovely woman in all the walks of life where the writer knew her. In social life her ways were attractive and winsome—almost the idol of her parents, the pet of her sisters and brother, a most affectionate wife, and a patient and devoted mother. From her first profession of Christ her walk was consistent, following diligently in the pathway of the saints. She endured affliction with the patience of an old and well trained soldier of the cross, and sustained bereavement with a loving submission to the righteous will of her heavenly Father. Her last sickness was too painful to admit of much connected conversation. She occasionally asked for the reading of select passages of Scripture, such as the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John. Her agonizing mother said: "Pray that the Lord may spare you to us a little longer." She answered: "Pray that the will of the Lord be done." Her death was of the peaceful kind, no demonstration heralding a triumph; but as she was beautiful in living she was beautiful in dying. She was the mother of three children, two of whom preceded her to glory.

JOSEPH D. NEWSOM.

DIED, at her home in Morehouse parish, La., on the thirteenth of February, 1875, Sister S. OLIVE HUNTER, wife of Bro. M. S. Hunter.

Sister Hunter was born in Jefferson county, Miss., July 25, 1850, and was baptized in infancy by Rev. B. M. Drake. She moved with her parents, John and —— McCrory, in 1851. She was happily married to Bro. M. S. Hunter May 26, 1869. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under the ministry of the writer, in 1850. She suffered for two weeks with pneumonia uncomplainingly; in fact to complain under any circumstances was what she was never known to do. She was of a meek, quiet and submissive spirit, always seeming to feel and say: "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." Raised by an uncomplaining mother, she followed that mother as she followed Christ. Her father says of her: "She was an exemplary child, earnestly pious throughout her whole life." She was a kind and an affectionate wife, making home the dearest place on earth to her husband—the retreat of quietness and peace. She was always cheerful. "She adorned the doctrine of God, her Savior, in all things." Like her sainted mother, who preceded her to the heavenly world by several years, her most intimate associates never knew her to speak an angry word. Sister Hunter died in her perfect mind, exhorting all who were about her to meet her in heaven. About the last words she spoke were, turning to her physician: "Doctor, meet me in heaven;" after which she quietly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, and her pure spirit entered the "rest prepared for the people of God." J. L. WRIGHT.

JOHN WESLEY MOORE died February 16, 1875, at his home in Franklin parish, La. Bro. Moore was born in Marengo county, Ala., April 5, 1829. Louisiana had been his home for some years previous to and up to the time of his death.

Bro. Moore united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Oakley church, in Franklin parish, La., under the ministry of Rev. James McKee, in the year 1872. But yet with him the force of habit and influence of old associations was strong. He had been bound by a strong man, and the fetters were not broken without a struggle. But when the "Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him," and remained with him, the sevenfold cord was at last broken, and sin lost its former power to fascinate. He was not wanting in Christian meekness, and deeply felt his unworthiness; and in his last hours, when lamenting his slighted opportunities, he left a message to his Christian brethren, asking their forgiveness for neglecting some of his duties.

When disease began to loosen the cords of his earthly tabernacle his thoughts were divided between earth and heaven. A fond wife and dutiful children craved a father's love and needed a father's care, and his spirit would fain linger with loved ones who were still tenting on earth; but when his Father called him he hesitated not, but was ready and willing to go. When visions of the "happy land" began to brighten he asked for a favorite hymn to be sung; but grief was silent, and he then attempted himself, in a faltering voice, to sing in a low tone:

"Oh, sing to me of heaven."

A. M. W.

BY ACTION of the first quarterly meeting, held at Downsville, Downsville circuit, Homer district, Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God to take from us our beloved brother, Dr. J. C. RICHARDSON, who was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; And whereas, The providences of God are incomprehensible, making attacks at points, and in places the most tender, taking from us dear friends, from the church and community some of its most useful members; therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow with humble submission under this affliction, yet are we deeply grieved, feeling that the church and community sustained a great loss; but we rejoice to hope he was prepared for the call that came so suddenly from the Master.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish his name, his acts of kindness and charity, associated with a spirit of generous liberality, as evidence of his devotedness to the church and his friends, and that he was ready for the solemn test when the summons came: "Give an account of thy stewardship."

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his family, and tender them our earnest condolence.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, one sent to his family, and one spread upon the minutes of this Quarterly Conference.

C. W. HONGE, Chairman.

ALEXANDER AVERY, SR., was born in Chesterfield district, S. C., January 16, 1801, and died, at his residence in Bibb county, Ala., May 6, 1875, aged seventy-one years, three months and nineteen days.

Bro. Avery was happily converted at a camp meeting held near Chappel's meeting-house, in Tuskaloosa county, Ala., in October, 1832. He immediately connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church; and from that time to the day of his death, a period of more than forty-two years, he showed forth the praise of his Maker by an "orderly walk and a godly conversation." I have known Bro. Avery from the days of my childhood, and, to take him in every way, he was one of the best men with whom I have ever been acquainted. He was a man of considerable wealth, and was ever ready with his means to support the ministry. Under his hospitable roof the Methodist itinerant ever found a warm welcome and a congenial home. He was proverbially the friend of the poor. Many widows and orphans will long remember him with gratitude as their benefactor. He leaves a widow, nine sorrowing children and many friends to mourn his loss. A. H. JAMES, JR.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, April 18, 1875, in the town of Homer, La., Sister MARY A. BLACKBURN, daughter of Robert A. and Prudence A. Wade. She was born in Enon, Macon county, Ala., May 31, 1848; removed with her parents to Louisiana in January, 1858, and was married to W. J. P. Blackburn December 27, 1866. Sister Blackburn, in company with her husband, visiting her mother and friends, living near Curry's school-house (a preaching point in the bounds of Minden circuit,) attended a protracted meeting held at this place, embracing the fifth Sabbath in August, 1873. It was a time of unusual outpouring of the divine Spirit. Being deeply convinced of sin, she earnestly sought God with all her heart, and we are happy to say that she experienced a corresponding conversion of joy and power. She lived, so far as we know, the religion she then professed to the day of her death. We can never forget the expression of her countenance when she joined the church; neither can we forget her kindness bestowed on us during our stay with the family while attending our District Conference shortly after her conversion.

W. P. KIMBALL.

HANON DUTY was born in Claiborne parish, La., January 23, 1855. Coming from Methodist parentage, he learned to love the doctrines and usages of our church. In October, 1869, at a meeting held in Trenton, La., he was converted and immediately connected himself with the church. As pastor and teacher I had him under my charge for years, and can bear glad testimony to his simple-hearted, earnest Christian character. Unobtrusive in his deportment, all were his friends—none wished him ill. During his long sickness—for he was afflicted for more than a year—his faith in Jesus never faltered. In March, 1875, he rapidly grew worse, and on the twenty-third of that month his guileless spirit ascended on high. In death, as in life, he was more than conqueror through Jesus. While we lament the bereavement of his mother and brothers and sisters, still we rejoice to believe that he is now at God's right hand, where there is fullness of joy and pleasures for evermore. J. LANE BORDEN.

THOMAS J. WOOD was born in Washington parish, April 18, 1844, and died at his residence, in said parish, December 16, 1874. My acquaintance with him dates back to boyhood. He early showed a sweetness of temper and amiability of disposition that endeared him to all who knew him. In the summer of 1871 he united with the church here, and from that time till his death lived a consistent member of it. He suffered much during his last illness, and for a week or so previous to his death his mind was wandering, and he was in a measure unconscious of his approaching end; but, we doubt not, all was well. While it is consoling to our hearts to hear our friends in their last moments express their love for Jesus, and hopes of an immortal crown, yet, after all, a devotion to God in life and health is the only sure basis on which our hopes and faith in the eternal happiness of our deceased friend can safely rest. ROBERT BARINGTON.

FRANCES ANN BROWN, wife of David Bolle, died December 17, 1874, at her home in Franklin parish, La. She was born in the State of South Carolina in the year 1825; from thence moved in her childhood to the State of Mississippi, and later in life to Louisiana, where she measured the remainder of the span of life allotted to her. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1853, since which time she has led a consistent religious life and kept the faith. Her words were few during her illness, but everything indicated to those left behind that she was "going home." Her death was calm and peaceful, the light gradually faded from her eye, and as kind friends folded her hands to rest the door of the caged bird was opened by angel hands, and her tired, wearied "spirit returned to God who gave it." A. M. W.

HENRY HARDY was born in North Carolina, September 1, 1791, and died at his residence, near Montgomery, Grant parish, La., April 24, 1875. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Lincoln county, Ga., more than forty years before his death. He has for a number of years been deprived of natural sight, but could by faith look beyond the Jordan of death, and read his title to the mansions prepared above. He was a consistent member of the church; and after a sojourn in this life of more than eighty-three years he departed to enjoy that eternal life which was the object of his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He leaves an aged consort and quite a number of relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, In the wisdom of God it has pleased him to remove from our school, by death, one of our members, SALLIE STOCKTON, an attentive, prompt and diligent scholar; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we miss her from her accustomed seat, we acknowledge the hand of God in this dispensation, and would meekly bow in submission to his will.

Resolved, That we accept this visitation as a special call to each and every member of the school to be always ready for the messenger of our Lord when he shall come; "for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

Resolved, That we tender the bereaved family and relatives our sincere sympathies, trusting they may all be reunited at last, in our Father's home above, to the loved ones gone before. MRS. E. C. NICHOLS

HOME.

BY O. S. OUTRAM.

Over dark fields, and rivers deep and cold,
And fen-land waste and drear,
Flies the glad message on a wire of gold:
"Home and true hearts are here!"

Pain would I hide me from the icy blast,
But yet it may not be;
So with averted eyes I hurry past
The firelight and the glee.

Home! gasps my home-sick spirit, and I bound
Onward and onward still;
Glad when in distance dies the siren sound
That might have warped my will.

And as at length I fling the wintry gloom
And perils far behind,
The twinkling point becomes a fire-lit room,
And rest and peace of mind.

And happy faces, and a loyal wife,
Whose pulses ever beat
One tune amid the treacherous chords of life,
Unchanging, true and sweet.

So from the lattice in the sapphire keep (Where lie the treasures true,)
A line of glory threads the hazy deep,
A voice comes out to woo.

Pure is the lamp that guides our feet on high,
And sweet the gentle chill,
So soft around Love's silken fetters lie,
There is no sense of thrall

As to one goal we move, a pilgrim band,
Chastened by tears and pain,
Thorns hedging in the way on either hand
Lest we should run in vain.

The Quiver.

Only Preaching.

One Sabbath morning I was preaching to my people upon the joys of salvation. In the course of my sermon I attempted to show the likeness and the difference in the gladness of a converted son, and that of his mother rejoicing over his conversion—the one weeping for joy in the consciousness of sins forgiven, and the indwelling love of Christ; the other weeping also, and in some sense with an equal joy, that her son who was lost is found, who was dead is alive.

To illustrate this truth I related a tender and strange incident which occurred in my father's family when I was a child.

My younger brother became, for awhile, utterly blind. A white film gathered over the pupil of either eye, shutting out every ray of light. Everything was tried of which we had any knowledge in those days, but all to no effect. The doctor declared that my brother Nattie was hopelessly blind.

One day brother and I sat on the kitchen floor, opposite to each other, at play. For want of a better ball I got an onion, and so we rolled it from one to the other. I would give it a push to him, and he, feeling it, would roll it back again. In the course of our sport the onion became bruised, and brother's sensitive eyes feeling its power, he involuntarily rubbed them with his fingers, which were wet with onion juice. Instantly the poor child sprang up screaming with pain, but the next moment, as his mother ran toward him, his agony turned to joy, and he ran around the room, waving his hands and crying aloud: "I see! I see! I see!" The delicate surgery of the onion had cut off the film, and it had run down with his tears upon his cheeks. His eyes were as bright as stars—as bright as Bartimeus' eyes after the miracle.

I can see mother standing with brother Nattie in her arms, thanking God for the restoration of the sight of her boy, while both were weeping for joy. It is a beautiful vision of my home days, the more precious now as both parent and child have "gone in through the gates into the city."

Well, as I have said, I told this story to my people as illustrative of the twofold joy of a converted son and his mother.

After church, at my house, I sat with my little girl—my Blue Eyes—in my lap. She had heard my sermon and evidently was much interested in the account of my brother's restoration.

Looking up into my face with that child-look that no one may describe, she exclaimed: "That story about Uncle Nattie—was that a true story?" "Why, yes?" I replied, "of course it was!" She answered: "O, it was! I thought you was only preaching!"

The next Sabbath, as I went to my church, I thought of the sermon which Blue Eyes preached, with her father's lap for a pulpit, and in my soul I prayed that I might so tell the gospel story that none would say at the close: "Only preaching."

And yet that child declaration is somehow expressive of the unvoiced sentiment of congregations. They give the preacher full credit for sincerity of purpose and know that he speaks the truth, and yet the whole thing to them is a matter of course, the fulfillment of a contract, the decent observance of a proper performance.

At the close of the most thrilling representations of the stage the thought returns: Only a play—only acting. So, when a sermon is ended, in which truths of eternal import have been presented with all holy energy, the retiring audience mingle with their talk of health, weather, music, and the like, expressions of pleasure and praise in regard to the sermon. "How his voice rang out," says one, "when at the close he repeated his text: 'Ye must be born again!'" "How expressive his gestures!" "Yes," says mother, "and what solemnity!" A third responds: "I do think he is a splendid preacher!" Quite likely that each one of those enthusiastic eulogists is of that moment a total stranger to the holy mystery of the new birth, without which there is no salvation. But the minister was "only preaching." Only the Holy Ghost can break this strange spell.—Baptist Union.

Do You Pray?

Abraham did. And God gave him an heir in whom all nations should be blessed, and promised to his descendants the land of Canaan, and would have spared even Sodom at his request had there been but ten righteous men in it; and make him the honored founder of a mighty nation and an ancestor of the great Messiah.

Jacob did. And as a prince he had power with God and prevailed; and was blessed by him at Peniel; and again at Padan Aram; and was spared through the famine; and richly blessed in his person, his family and his descendants through all the Jewish nation.

Moses did. And God made him the deliverer of his people, to lead them out of their bondage in Egypt, and conduct them through the opening sea and to the very border of the promised land, and to give them his law and his ordinances; and, when his end was come, buried him with his own hand in the valley, after he had died upon the mount.

Joshua did. And he was permitted to go into the promised land and possess it, and overthrow the enemies of his people, and establish them as a nation in their promised possession.

David did. And, though the cares of a kingdom pressed upon him, he still found time for communion with God, and has left us in the Psalms the richest treasury of devotion that the world has ever seen.

Hezekiah did. And his life was prolonged for fifteen years; and the Assyrians were destroyed, a hundred and fifty thousand of them in a single night; and the Babylonish captivity was delayed till he had gone to his rest.

Daniel did. And though the noble of Babylon conspired for his ruin, God kept him in safety, and closed the mouths of the lions that he should not be injured, and gave him the highest honors of the kingdom.

Paul did. And it was the first pulsation of his new life in Christ Jesus. "Behold, he prayeth," was the mark, divinely given, of his conversion and discipleship; from his being the bitter persecutor of the saints to being a saint himself. And his life of prayer led him to a life of labor for his countrymen, for the Gentiles, for the church of Christ, till at last his prayers were merged in the endless praises of heaven.

Our Lord Jesus Christ did. And we should never forget it. Though himself perfect and divine, with no sins to be pardoned, no evil passions to be subdued, no temptations that he could not resist, no weakness that he could not overcome, no enemies that he could not conquer, still, as a man, he prayed. In the desert, in the garden, on the deep, by the wayside, by himself, with his disciples, and on the cross, he prayed. And his prayers were heard and answered in blessings on his followers and the church, and a dying but ransomed world.

With such examples, and with such blessed results in view, do you pray? With all the commands and encouragements and promises to prayer, do you pray? Do you ask, when God has said you shall receive? Do you seek, when he has promised you shall find? Do you knock, when he has declared it shall be opened unto you? When he has said he is more willing to grant his Holy Spirit to them that ask it than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children, do you come and ask that you may receive that Spirit and so live forever? With all these encouragements and promises in view, do you pray?—American Messenger.

Carrier Pigeons.

The large numbers of carrier pigeons used during the Franco-Prussian war for the transmission of dispatches, and their more recent proposed employment for carrying messages during a transatlantic balloon voyage, have been the means of exciting a wider public interest in these curious birds than has existed for many years past. In Holland and France the breed is carefully guarded, and in all the European countries fine specimens of the birds find ready buyers. Prussia has a pigeon communication between her capital city and the fortresses of Metz and Strasbourg. In Paris many of the daily journals receive news of events transpiring in the Legislative Assembly at Versailles through the carrier pigeons, in preference to using the telegraph. The birds traverse the distance in from fifteen to twenty minutes, and the intelligence thus reaches the newspaper offices much more quickly than would be the case were the dispatches obliged to wait their turn for transmission by the telegraph operators, or otherwise delayed by official formalities.

The long employment of the pigeons as news carriers has been the means of proving conclusively that no instinct guides them back to their cotes. On foggy days they will not attempt to return, nor during the night, except at times when there is a clear atmosphere and a full moon. When released, the bird flies upward and then circles around until it sees certain features of the landscape which it recognizes as being adjacent to its home. These it has learned to know during short flights which it is allowed to make during the training period; and therefore the instant the surroundings of its abode, often extending over a radius of several miles, meet the pigeon's eye, it at once travels with wonderful velocity in their direction. It is said that, when a bird fails to remember any portion of the landscape beneath it, it will fly for some miles without any reference to course, and then circle about again, and this will be repeated until a familiar object is caught sight of; or else the bird becomes exhausted, gives up the search and never returns.—Scientific American.

A WONDERFUL ISLAND.—Men have often tried to rival nature on her own ground. One remarkable scene of such effort is still sought by tourists in Lake Maggiore, in northern Italy, adjoining Switzerland. In Lake Maggiore lie the Islands belonging to the Borromean family, among which is "Isola Bella," an enchanted ground well worthy of its name. Two hundred years ago the island was a barren rock; to-day, thanks to the freaks of a spendthrift nobleman, it is "a joy forever." Ten terraces built in massive stone piers rise out of the water, earth of sufficient depth to grow the largest trees was brought there, and these many years it has been a little forest of luxurious vegetation for every clime. There flourish the camphor and the India-rubber trees, the bread fruit and the banana, the black bamboo and the American aloe, the cedar of Lebanon, the magnolia, the date palm laden with fruit, and the camelli is fifteen feet high. Every step brings one into contact with new beauties, while statues and wondrous works in stone mingle everywhere with the living green ivies, honeysuckles, trumpet-creepers, and a wealth of ferns and creeping plants. The "spendthrift nobleman" who perpetrated all this magnificence was Count Vitaliano Borromeo, a descendant of the celebrated philanthropist, Archbishop Charles Borromeo, one of the saints of the Roman calendar.

MUSLIN DRESSES, even of the most delicate colors, can be cleaned in ten minutes or a quarter of an hour without loosing their color. Melt half a pound of soap in a gallon of water, empty it into a washing-tub; place near two other large tubs of clean water, and stir into one a quart of bran. Put the muslin in the soap, turn it over and kneal it a few minutes; squeeze it out well, but do not wring it, lest it get torn; rinse it about quickly in the bran for a couple of minutes. Rinse again well for a couple of minutes in clean water. Squeeze out dry and hang it between two lines. A clear, dry day should be chosen to wash muslin dresses. Half a dozen may be done in this way in half an hour. The last rinse may be prepared in the same way as the rinses for woolen fabrics. A colored pattern on a white ground must not be blued. The bran may here be dispensed with. When the dress is dry make the starch; for colored muslin white starch, and unboiled, but made with boiling water, is best for muslin dresses. Stir the starch with the end of a wax candle; dip the dress; hang it again to dry. When dry rinse it quickly and thoroughly in clear water; hang it to dry again; sprinkle and roll up; afterward iron it with very hot irons. Hot irons keep the starch still. This rinsing after starching is called clear-starching; none of the stiffness, but much of unsightliness of the starch is removed in this way. The advantage of thus cleaning dresses, instead of washing them, is: First, if colored, the process is so rapid that there is not time for the colors to run; secondly, the fabric is not rubbed, and therefore not strained and worn out; thirdly, the process saves nearly all labor, and is so quickly done that any lady may manage it for herself in the absence of her laundry maid or a lady's maid.—Household Guide.

IN THE course of a recent lecture on "Congregational Psalmody" the Rev. Dr. Allan noticed some of the incongruities that used to occur by the awkward divisions in repetition lines. For instance: "Love thee bet—;" "My poor polluted heart" became "My poor pol—;" "We'll catch the fleeting hour" was sung "We'll catch the flee—;" "And take thy pilgrim home" became "And take thy pil—;" "And in the pious he delights" was sung "And in the pi— and in the pi—;" and "Send down salvation from on high" became "Send down sal—." A soprano in one case sang, "Oh, for a man," and the chorus responded, "Oh, for a mansion in the skies." In one case the soprano modestly sang, "Teach me to kiss;" the alto took up the strain, "Teach me to kiss," while the bass rendered it quite prosaic by singing, "Teach me to kiss the rod."

WHAT FATHER TAKES.—There is food for thought in the story that is told of a young lad who for the first time accompanied his father to a public dinner. The waiter asked him: "What will you take to drink?"

Hesitating for a moment, he replied: "I'll take what father takes."

The answer reached his father's ear, and instantly the full responsibility of his position flashed upon him. Quicker than lightning various thoughts passed through his mind; in a moment his decision was made, and in tones tremulous with emotion, and to the astonishment of those who were acquainted with him, he said: "Waiter, I'll take water."

THERE'S no music in a "rest," Katie, that I know of, but there's the making of music in it. And people are always missing that part of the life-melody, and scrambling on without counting; not that it's easy to count, but nothing on which so much depends ever is easy. People are always talking of perseverance and courage and fortitude; but patience is the truest and worthiest part of fortitude, and the rarest too. I have known twenty persevering girls to one patient one, but it is only the twenty-first one who can do her work, out and out, and enjoy it. For patience lies at the root of all pleasures as well as of all powers.—Ruskin.

IN A CHURCH not far from the north of Aberdeen one of the members was in the habit of sleeping every Sabbath during the sermon. One Sabbath, however, the quietness and gravity of the church were fairly upset by the steeper losing his equilibrium, and falling bump right in the passage. The minister, who was an eccentric and quaint, plain-spoken old man, stopped short in his sermon, and, addressing himself to the now awake member, said: "John, ye've gotten mony a soun' sleep in the devil's cradle, but he has fairly coupit it on ye the day."

MACDONALD, the last of the lords of the isles, happening to be in Ireland, was invited to an entertainment given by the Lord Lieutenant. He chanced to be among the last in coming in, and sat himself down at the foot of the table near the door. The Lord Lieutenant requested him to sit beside him. Macdonald asked in his native tongue: "What does the earl say?" On being told that he was desired to move toward the head of the table he replied: "Tell the earl that wherever Macdonald sits, that is the head of the table."

Religious Intelligence.

OF THE 5,797 Wesleyan Sunday schools of Great Britain, 3,433 are without libraries. In one district, containing 255 schools, 188 are thus destitute.

THE Congregationalists report in their Sunday school for 1874 an aggregate membership of 385,338, a gain over the year previous of nearly 13,000.

LIEUT. CONDER, the leader of the English Palestine exploration party, is confident he has discovered the true site of "Bethabara beyond Jordan."

EMMANUEL Reformed Episcopal church, Ottowa, Canada, was opened March 14, with services by Bishop Cheney. The congregations upon each of the day's meetings crowded the church to its utmost capacity.

THE Christian people of Philadelphia are busy with the greatest bazar ever held in that city. It is a "Bazar of all Nations," and is for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association, which is about to erect a magnificent building at the corner of Fifteenth and Chestnut streets.

APROPOS of the recent "tombstone" controversy, the Rev. D. Clarke, assistant priest of Belgrave, Leicester, writes to the Church Review to offer two guineas out of his stipend of £120 a year toward the expense of resisting the claims of "those plague-spots in every parish, the Dissenting ministers!"

DR. MITCHELL writes from Calcutta that the work in Gujerat, western India, carried on among the Dhers by the Irish Presbyterian mission, is attaining large proportions. The candidates for baptism last year were 686. The work is becoming almost as great as that among the Santhals in Bengal.

IT IS announced that during the past twenty years the Wesleyans have erected 1,923 chapels, at a cost of £2,155,357 (over $10,000,000.) The general chapel committee report that in 1874 sanction was given to the erection of 130 chapels, 9 ministers' houses, 21 schools and 40 organs, besides 82 enlargements and alterations.

CLOSE COMMUNION.—The Baptist Union says that the progress of open communion sentiment in their denomination "is surprising and most encouraging. At the rate of growth which has developed for three years past we shall soon reach in America the happy position already attained in England, where the question has ceased to agitate or divide."

MISSIONARY GROUND.—In Maine, it is stated, one-fourth of the Congregational churches have no settled ministers, and a considerable number have no preaching at all. Communion is administered by visiting ministers once a year, but in some of them the Lord's Supper has not been celebrated for years. There is now a proposition made to have the Lord's Supper administered without the assistance of ordained ministers.

THE Roman correspondent of the London News says: "The Pope is in a vigorous state of health. To-day (February 4) he blessed the Lenten preachers of Rome. He then revisited, for the first time in four years and a half, the Vatican Basilica, with prelates and cardinals, and prayed there. He approved the mosaic monument commemorating the pontifical jubilee and other works. He reascended the long stairs unsupported."

AT THE general quarterly meeting of the Primitive Methodist Home Mission committee, held recently in London, about fifty missionaries were present. The official returns, so far as they had come to hand, furnished the following net gains in the missions for the year: England and Wales, 637; Scotland, 58; Ireland, 75; Africa, 19; New Zealand, 111. Further reports would probably swell the total to over 1,000. The financial and other returns were encouraging.

THE Abbe McMaster did not believe that it was best for the Roman Catholic Church, in its present circumstances in this country, to have an American cardinal, and intimates that his eminence the cardinal himself agreed with him. But now he says: "The wisdom of God is stronger than men; we renounce our previous judgment, change our mind, see a great deal of good that may come of it, and are sincerely, from the heart, rejoiced at it." So much for infallibility.

IT IS estimated that during the season of the annual religious fairs more people are encamped on the banks of the Ganges than there are inhabitants in the whole of the United States. At some places on the river which are held especially sacred the encampments on either bank extend from three to five miles in length, and are estimated to hold half a million of people. The railway trains are packed with pilgrims, who no longer make the annual pilgrimage on foot.

THE Foreign Mission Journal of the Southern Baptist Church states that the interest of Southern Baptists in foreign missions is widening. With smaller resources the contributions are up to the average attained in the years before the war, and come from a much larger number of persons. Last year they amounted to $31,807. Two missionaries have recently been sent to Liberia to make a new beginning with the work in that country. In Italy the Plymouth Brethren seem to be making considerable inroads on the Baptist congregations.

AT THE Wesleyan missionary anniversary, held at Manchester, England, in March last, Rev. J. Nettleton, a returned missionary of Fiji, made the interesting statement that while it was true that the Australian Missionary Society had a right to claim—if it should be found necessary—six thousand or seven thousand pounds a year in aid of missions, yet during the last two years, such had been the marvelous benevolence and liberality of the Polynesian churches, they had demanded no money from, but had remitted six hundred or seven hundred pounds a year to the parent society. Instead of exhausting the society's resources, the Australian Conference had been helping them.

COUNTING THE FINGERS.

Davy, dear, your fingers hold;
Listen till my story's told.

Thumb's a rogue, and whispers, "Come,
Let us steal the sweets," says Thumb.

Straight First Finger bends to hear:
She's a rogue when Thumb is near.

Second Finger says: "I'll go!"
Cries his Finger: "Count me too.

Little Finger stands alone—
Says: "The sweets are not our own."

Thumb says: "Let no Finger say
Where the sweets have gone to-day."

First Finger then cries out: "No,
Not a word from me shall go."

Second Finger shakes her head:
"She would suffer death indeed."

Finger Third is full of fear
Lest the marks of guilt appear.

Little Finger cries: "For shame!
I shall tell where lies the blame.

"If we all are made to smart,
With the rest I'll bear my part."

And I think that, through and through,
Little Finger's right. Don't you?

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Please tell Grandpa Goodale, Harry and Charlie that it is not at all convenient to send them my photograph. They might get tired of placing a piece of cardboard "on the table every night." In its stead I will send them a dollar. Perhaps some of them can find a Nannie Trousdale, upon whom they can bestow it.

I ask Grandpa Goodale's pardon for being in such a hurry to hear "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest." Though it is still a mystery, he has more than supplied its place by telling us about the lovely Florence Hampton. She reminds me of the lamented Mr. Wilkinson's little girl, who wanted to "highway and hedge 'em." I will read Grandpa Goodale's pieces with more pleasure than ever. I still remain your little friend,

The History of a Penny.

A FABLE FROM THE GERMAN.

In the mint, where all our pounds, shillings and pence are made, there once was a gold ducat and a penny just coined. There they lay, shining and clean, close together on a table, and the bright rays of the sun glanced and sparkled on them.

Then said the sovereign to the penny: "You jump; get away from me! You are only made of common copper, and are not worthy of the sunlight that shines on you. You will soon be lying all black and dirty on the ground, and no one will take the trouble of picking you up. I am made of costly gold. I shall travel about the world with great lords and princes; I shall do great things, and perhaps some day shine in the Emperor's crown."

In the same room there lay, by the fire, an old gray cat. When he heard this he licked his paws thoughtfully, turned himself around on the other side, and said: "Some things go by the rule of contrary."

And so it proved with the pieces of money. It turned out the very contrary of what the gold ducat expected.

It fell into the possession of an old miser, who locked it up in a great chest, where it lay idle and useless with hundreds of others like itself. But when the old miser found that he should not live much longer he buried all his money in the ground, that no one might get it, and there lies the proud ducat to this day, dirty and black, and no one will ever find it.

But the penny traveled far about in the world, and it came to high honors. And this is how it happened:

First, one of the poor boys at the mint received it in his wages. He carried it home, and, as his little sister was so delighted with the clean, shining penny, he gave it to her.

The child ran out into the garden to show it to her mother, and saw a poor, lame beggar passing by, who begged for a piece of bread.

"I have not got any," said the child.

"Then give me a penny to buy some," said the beggar, and the child gave him her penny.

The beggar limped off to the baker's. Just as he came to the shop an old friend of his passed by, dressed as a pilgrim, with mantle, staff and scrip. He gave to some children who were standing round the baker's door pictures of good and holy men, and the children in return put some money into the little box he had in his hand. The beggar asked: "Where are you travelling to?"

The pilgrim answered: "Many hundred miles away to the city of Jerusalem, where the holy Christ dwelt and died. I wish to offer up my prayers at his grave, and redeem my brother, who is a prisoner in the hands of the Turks; it is for this purpose that I beg for money."

"Then take a mite toward it for me," said the beggar, and he gave his penny to the pilgrim, and would have gone away as hungry as he came had not the baker, who saw all that had passed, given him the loaf that he wished to buy.

And now the pilgrim wandered through many lands, and went in a ship, far over the sea, to the holy city of Jerusalem. When he arrived there he first offered up his prayer at the sepulcher, and then went to the Turkish Sultan, who kept his brother a prisoner. He offered the Turk a large sum of money if he would set his brother free. But the Sultan wanted more.

The pilgrim said: "I have nothing more to offer you but this copper penny, which was given to me by a poor, hungry beggar, out of compassion. May you also have pity, as he had, and this copper penny will secure you a reward."

Then the Sultan took compassion on him, and set his brother free, and he received the penny from the good pilgrim.

The Sultan put the copper penny in his pocket, and after a little while forgot all about it. Now it happened that, after a time, the Emperor of Germany came to Jerusalem to fight against the Sultan. So the Sultan fought bravely at the head of his army, and was never wounded. But one day an arrow was aimed at his right breast; it struck him indeed, but glanced off from his clothes without wounding him. The Sultan was very much surprised, and when his clothes were examined, after the battle, the penny was found in the pocket, and this had caused the arrow to glance off. So the Sultan prized the penny very much, and had it fastened with a golden chain to the hilt of his curved sword. Some time afterward the Sultan was made prisoner by the Emperor, and had to yield up his sword to the conqueror. So the penny came into the possession of the Emperor.

One day, when the Emperor was sitting at the table, and was just in the act of raising his goblet to his lips, the Empress said she was anxious to see the curved Turkish sword. So it was brought in, and, as the Emperor was showing it to the Empress, the penny became unfastened and fell into the goblet of wine. The Emperor saw it, and before drinking the wine he took out the penny. But when he looked at it he perceived the penny had turned quite green. This showed everybody there was poison in the goblet. A wicked servant had mixed the poison, hoping to kill the Emperor. The servant was ordered to execution, but the penny was set in the Emperor's crown. So this penny made a child happy, gave bread to a beggar, delivered a prisoner, saved a Sultan from being wounded, and preserved the life of an Emperor. It deserved to be set in an Emperor's crown. Perhaps it is there to this day, if we could only see the crown.—Children's Hour.

I Know Father Loves Me.

"I wouldn't stand it, Willie Bond. I'd just run away if I was in your place," said Dick Allen to a little boy who stood leaning on the gate, looking down the road at a group of boys. "I think your father is real mean not to let you go sailing with us. I don't believe he cares much for you, any way, not to let a fellow have any fun. My father lets me do just as I want to; and if he didn't, I guess I would," continued Dick, with much emphasis. "Come, Will, go with us any way. Your father won't never know anything about it," coaxed the wicked boy.

Willie let go the gate, and, straightening himself up, answered with much spirit: "No, I won't; and my father ain't mean, either. He don't know how to be mean. He don't let me go because it ain't—it ain't best; and that's why, Dick Allen. I know my father loves me, and I'll mind him too; so you needn't wait for me any longer;" and Willie turned and left his tempter to himself. Dick joined the group of waiting boys, and pretty soon Willie heard a derisive shout of "baby boy!" but his father, who had overheard all, thought him a "manly boy."

To tell the truth, Willie had been thinking some pretty hard things about his father before Dick came along, but it quite shocked him to hear such thoughts put into words. Perhaps if he had thought that God heard his thoughts, quite as distinctly as he heard Dick's words, he would have been a little more careful about his thinking.

That anybody should call his father mean was more than Willie could stand. It aroused all his filial spirit at once. His good, noble father mean? Impossible. And then, too, that Dick should say his father didn't care much for him! "I know my father loves me." Yes, Willie was sure of that. He had had too many proofs of it to doubt it. Why, who was it that cared for him, night after night, during his long sickness last winter? His loving father. Who bestowed benefits and kindnesses unnumbered upon him every day but that same kind father? Yes, Willie knew his father loved him; and now that his mind was unbiased by resentment toward him, he could see things in their true light. He recalled many instances when he had been denied some pleasure or coveted thing, and the denial had always proved to be for his best good.

A GOAT FOR A BIBLE.—A Dutch missionary who is among the Hottentots in Namaqualand, South Africa, has written a letter of thanks for the Bibles and Testaments sent to the people in his district. He prefers that they should give something in return for the precious volume. He thinks that the old and young value a thing more if it costs them some trouble to get it, or if they pay a little toward the expense of it. The poor people in England and other countries bring their pennies and their shillings to pay for the Bible, and why should not the Hottentots give something?

But what have they to give?

One young man said to the missionary: "If you will let me have a Bible I will do three days' work in your garden." To this the missionary agreed; and, as he considered the young man's labor was worth a shilling a day, he paid three shillings to the Bible Society in the name of his workman.

Four other people brought goats, worth four shillings each; and two brought lambs, worth three shillings each; and for these they got Bibles.

In the Sunday school, when the missionary said that there were Bibles to be bought, one said: "I have a goat. I shall buy a Bible for myself." Another said: "Grandfather must give me a goat to buy a Bible with." Another said: "I will run and ask my father for a goat." Thus were the goats exchanged for Bibles.—Child's Companion.

GOD is so gracious that, although he is the source of all goodness, yet he rewards his servants as if they had done it all.—Gossner.

Garments Not Defiled.

Walking in white, in a dirty world, requires no little care. There is uncleanness in every pathway, and the liability to jostle and contact is imminent. The clean and fine linen is easily soiled by the vile rubbish through which the saints have to pick their way to the better land. A capital part of every man's religion is this: "To keep himself unspotted from the world."

Even in our efforts to save people there is a timely admonition: "And others, save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." It would seem that in pulling the fallen out of the ditch there is perilous risk of getting daubed with the slime. There is the possibility that in the effort at rescue we may get burnt. Loving and pitying the sinner, we must keep up a most hearty hatred of the sin. "All things to all men" has this to qualify it: that we hate the spotted garment, and keep clear of any contagion there may be in it. Christians must not soil themselves in their ways and means of reaching and saving the world. The garments of the church—the consciences and character of its members—are sometimes contaminated by dubious expedients. It is the filth of worldliness that is to be avoided—its spirit, frivolity, love of style and gain, its low motives, inordinate selfishness and love of pleasure. Catering to these may seemingly help the finances, and build brick walls and lofty spires, but it defaces and impoverishes the spiritual temple.

It is worldliness, in its decent and respectable ways, that is capable of defiling unawares. The pollen of flowers leaves a stain on the robe that brushes through the garden walks. The very atmosphere of society is laden with the soot of unbelief and wickedness, and its polluting showers fall as silently and as unnoticed as the impalpable dust.

Sardis was a bad place, we have reason to believe, and only a few had escaped damage. It is noted rather as a wonder that any faithful ones should be found there. "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments." There was one family worth saving from the flood, and one man with a portion of his family escaped from Sodom. There are more good people in proportion to the bad now, but the world is very much the same. It defiles the garments of the saints unless the [illegible] of Christ look well to their ways and take heed to their steps. The Christian garb, smirched and mottled with avarice, fraud and lecsing, is an uncomely thing. Nothing is so repulsively untidy as robes pure and lustrous draggled in the mire, limp and begrimed with the foulness of the gutter. The defiled garment of Christian character and profession is a thing that may well excite the aversion, as well as the pity and loathing, of God and angels. Such objects are in every community. The plumage of more than angel-born, the crests of sons are seen drooping, and besmeared with sensuality and diabolism. In the ways of business, of pleasure, of society, these spotted garments are trailed. The livery of what should be a holy and heavenly citizenship is flecked with the touches and pressures of evil associations and practices, and reeks with the odors and fumes of intemperance and lust.

And yet the blessed marvel is with us, in our world and in our day. It is something more than a perpetual miracle, and more extraordinary than if we were to see troops of angels in our fields, highways and business marts—this fact, that there are people who have not defiled their garments. This is the standing demonstration of our religion: the pure hearts and immaculate lives of at least a few who move about in the world, and are not untouched and overwhelmed by its influence. If there is not much goodness, there is some. If not many, there are at least a few who have withstood the strong currents of worldliness and vice, and have kept themselves clean. The power of the gospel to save has its witnesses in every age, in every country and in every community. There are names here and there, bright and untarnished, shining like stars in the firmament, and attesting the greatness of redeeming grace and wisdom. Such exemplary piety may be comparatively rare, and yet there is altogether much of it. If in the worst of places there were a few names, we may believe that the aggregate of true devotion and faith is something to rejoice over. Proportionately there are doubtless far more holy souls and unblemished lives in the world than ever before, and we believe that the average type of our religion is higher and more complete than it was in those times when the few names were left in Sardis.

One of the worst forms of skepticism is that which doubts of all goodness, and cynically scouts at the reality of Christian purity. We are better for believing that there are clean hands and pure hearts, made so by the blood of Jesus and by the work of the Holy Spirit. The fact not only honors God and proves the gospel divine, but it lifts up to us all the possibility and the privilege of a like experience. How beautiful those lives must have been in their singular perfection, surrounded, as they were, by apostate professors and by the voluptuous vices of such a city as Sardis! How surpassingly beautiful are the holy lives we know of, made even more radiant by contrast with the wickedness of the age and by the general ungodliness of the world! It is the most delightful thought we can have in relation to the world that there are good people in it, that there are souls sweet and pure in our midst, faithful ones whose garments show no stain.

It is not strange that the Master's prayer looked to this as the most vital of all interests. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." The Savior's concern was for the purity of his followers, the holiness of his church—"not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing." The danger was from the evil of the world, that the garments might be defiled and the moral power lost. The disciples were needed in the world as its light, its salt, its salvation, but to be these they must be kept from the evil. They must keep themselves unspotted from the world, free from its covetousness, inordinate affection and unbridled lust.

It would seem to stand for the highest eulogy upon the Christian that he has not defiled his garments. It means the consistent life, blameless conversation, the upright heart. And it must embrace much that is positive and active in the courageous confession and devoted service of Christ. It is not the life of the cloister, of the habitual recluse, but the stirring work of religious sacrifice, effort and contact with the world in the great battle of Christian duty.

Our Little Friends.

We are glad to hear from them, and we write this article to them. We have a column or two prepared especially for the young people, but we are glad to know that they do not confine their reading to that part of the paper. Children usually sit at table with the grown people, and take their meals with the family. We love to feel that they are interested in the whole paper, and we try to make it all as plain and practical as we can. The editor sometimes forgets himself, and writes articles too long, and some others who write do the same thing. Every week when the printer comes for his copy for the young people, we say in our heart, over and over again: God bless the children! God bless the youth of the church! God bless those whose sharp young eyes shall glisten and sparkle over these columns!

And our chief thought is about their salvation. We hope you have pleasant homes, kind parents, good schools, and things nice and comfortable to wear. But we are more concerned for your souls and for your conversion. Christ has died for you, he blesses all little children, and sends the Holy Spirit to help them to love him and keep his commandments. You have been baptized—never use the word christen—whereby you have been recognized as members of the church and as redeemed by the blood of Jesus. Have you sought and found pardon, and the assurance of it in your hearts? Baptized children are expected to come forward and assume the vows implied in their baptism, and to be recognized as a part of the family of God, to take the Lord's Supper, and to confess the Savior before the church and the world. If children grow up without taking this step, they go out of the church and forsake the Savior, who has loved them and bought them with his own blood. We would impress this duty upon all our young readers. It is your privilege and duty to be Christians now, to seek and obtain the blessing of new hearts, to know that you are converted, and to be known as members of the church. If old enough to do wrong and feel wrong, you are old enough to need and experience the power of Jesus to save you from sin.

Of course you have read about Samuel and Timothy. They were by no means the only instances of early piety that might have been mentioned. We suspect that nearly all the good people in olden times began to serve God in their childhood. Moses, Joshua, Caleb, David and Nehemiah were doubtless good, religious boys. Daniel and his three friends were pious from their youth. However it may have been then, we know how it is now. Nearly all the Christians we are acquainted with were converted in childhood or early youth. It will be so with you. If you pass into your teens and beyond without taking a stand for Christ, you are not likely ever to do so. When older people are converted it is a sorrow they never get over in this world that they were so late in coming to Christ. It is hard for people to learn music, or to take up any new trade or profession, when they are old. You may be sure it is much harder for old people to become religious. But, alas! how few of our little friends will live to be old.

We want you to be safe in the arms of Jesus now, to grow up in his love, and to be ready. It is a chance you have of giving a whole life to God—the bright and fresh morning, and the day and the evening. God loves to have all—the bud, the opening flower, all the sweetness, beauty and fragrance of the heart and life—from early childhood to old age. Religion is not a sad thing, but joyous. It makes happy hearts and glad faces. It does not interfere with the innocent sports and amusements of youth, it does not make young people old. If you know any morose and vinegar-faced professors of religion—Christians of the crab-apple sort—you may be sure it is not religion, but the want of it, that makes them sour. God wants you to be happy, and he knows that you cannot be truly so without his love in your hearts.

Young Christians—boys and girls who are trying to be religious—have their own peculiar temptations and troubles. Some of them grow out of their associations at school as well as at home. In its way the trial is often greater than any that comes from our associations later in life. The editor was a boy once, and he knows it to be so. He has been all along where his little friends are now. You must be firm, courageous, prayerful, and keep close to Jesus. After awhile opposition will be conquered, and every day it will be easier to hold your ground. Read your Bibles, pray and ask God to help you. If you make a mistake, or fall into sin, never give way to discouragement, but go to the Savior and take a fresh start.

We hope a great many of our young people are religious—we know that they are—but we would urge them all to seek and find the pearl of great price. We wish especially to hear of the conversion of the children—of revivals in the Sunday schools. We invite our little friends to write to us about their religious feelings and thoughts, and of their conversion. Have you taken your places as members of the church and as soldiers of the cross? Are you learning to sing, do you listen to the preaching, and do you pray for your preacher? We have but little doubt that the children who read the ADVOCATE are trying to get others to read it, that they are giving something for missions, and that they are always on the watch to bring new scholars to the Sunday school.

A Question.

DEAR SIR: Will you please be so kind as to answer the following through the ADVOCATE:

The other day I attended the funeral ceremony of a child, conducted by a Methodist minister, who in the discourse said that the child was now in heaven in the arms of Jesus; but afterward said that it would sleep until the last great day, when it would arise and be received among the blessed in heaven.

Now what I wish to know: Is this the doctrine of the Methodist Church concerning the life after death? and, if so, how does it harmonize this seeming (if not real) inconsistency?

Hope you will not throw this aside, but answer as soon as possible.

The above comes to us from one who seems to be an honest inquirer after truth. We are surprised, however, that he did not state his difficulties to the Methodist minister, whom he regarded as inconsistent in his statements. No doubt the matter would have been cleared up in a few words. The souls of the good at death enter into a state of conscious happiness. The penitent malefactor was assured of being with Christ in paradise on the day of his death. Paul was of this opinion. "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." Death is a sleep as to the body. Paul, with reference to the resurrection of the body, says: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." We see no inconsistency in this. The soul lives and is happy in paradise. The body sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the resurrection of the just. This, so far as we know, is the view of the Methodist and of all evangelical churches. It is in accordance with our accepted standards, although our Articles of Religion say nothing on the subject.

The First Decade Revival.

Dr. Lovick Pierce wrote the following interesting letter to the Rev. Albert Hunt, D. D., of New York. It was published in the New York Christian Advocate. Such a shaking in the valley of dry bones of the present period would be a blessing. Perhaps it may come.

DEAR BRO. HUNT: I will now write of the great revival during the first decade. It was a great phenomenon, about which many conjectures were put forth. It was a confounding sight to infidels; for, after all that science could do or say, the phenomenon could not be woven into either epilepsy or catalepsy. To the old predestinarian professors—and they made up nearly all who professed religious affections or infirmities—it was a provoking mystery, but was Methodist sorcery. The Methodists had first entered that part of our State—South Carolina—in 1801, and in 1803 this astounding phenomenon took place, at our preaching-place, and my father was the first subject of it in the congregation. Many others were also made subject to it. But it was set down as Methodist enchantment, because no such diabolical visitation had ever fallen upon the people until after the Methodist preachers came into the country.

To place the case into the hands of legerdemain anyhow, on that very day Rev. Thomas Darby, then our circuit preacher, said, when he got up: "If my feelings do not deceive me, you will see strange things here to-day." And so we did; but it made him a magician sure. But the bitterness of the pill was mainly in this: that to acknowledge this to be a work of God was to acknowledge that these Methodist preachers were ministers of Christ; and this they could not be, because they were pulling down the old Calvinistic castle and building up a new something. They even held that one of these supposed elect could fall from grace. So they denounced the whole as a grand heresy. The falling down was all affected, and the shouting was all wild-fire and fox-fire, etc. So we agreed that at their next monthly meeting we would close up and worship with them, to show them we were brethren. And so we did.

The minister preached; and, as his wont was, opened the door for the giving in of experience. My brother Reddick, full of faith, not understanding what the invitation meant, and always having something to say for the Lord, rose up in one corner of the house and commenced an exhortation in Methodist style, and in thirty minutes I could have walked over the floor on those coats of the Lord. Such a religious uproar had hardly anywhere come off before. The minister stood in his pulpit, tears streaming. At last he came down crying, and said: "What is this? I never felt so before. I feel as if the big end of my heart was up;" and no doubt it was up.

The same thing came off again in another of his churches, under a sermon from the same Darby, who was considered the magician in this reign of frenzy. Thus did God open his own way.

As to the case alluded to by Stevens, in which I am mentioned, it is substantially true. It was in 1806 at a camp meeting six miles from where I am now writing. The congregation was so large we had to preach at three stands. I was mounted on a table, three feet square, with an immense crowd around me. I took for my text Romans vi. 6. I am astonished now at my presumption. But the power of God came down and the people fell in piles. The noise of crying for mercy and praising him for salvation became so overwhelming that I could not be heard, and I sat down cross-legged upon my table and looked on upon the mighty power of God. It was a day never to be forgotten. I never knew how many were converted.

And now, as to the phenomenon itself. I can only give it to you as I saw it, perhaps in a thousand instances. Occasionally it was preceded by a singular rigor, but generally the first that was seen was a simple tumble from the seat as if dead—often without a groan of mental anguish, sometimes with a dreadful shriek, as if death's arrow had pierced them. This condition was evidently for the purpose of making all men see that it was supernatural. It fell upon all classes. Its results in different grades of life were all alike. There was nothing like life in it except heart, pulse and breathing. They were as rigid in their joints as death. Raise them up by the head, they came up like a corpse—still. Most of them were never heard to utter a moan, a groan or a prayer while in this state.

The first change we could see in them was an opening in the muscles of the face, like the beginning of a very rich smile; when, bounding to their feet, they most generally commenced with a loud shout, followed by exhortations of the most extraordinary pathos and eloquence I have ever witnessed. Very few of them ever turned back. I cannot from memory say any of them did. Their new living and good living was proof of its divine order. I saw eleven of this class fall at once under one of my brother's exhortations. But multitudes got religion then just as they do now, only with a hundredfold more anguish for sin than now. This is my unsolved problem.

LOVICK PIERCE.

SPARTA, GA., March 3, 1875.

Passages from Mr. Moody's Sermons.

The reports of the labors of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London now reach to near the end of the second month. During the greater part of April, says the Christian World, services were conducted daily in each of the four divisions of the metropolis. Messrs. Moody and Sankey divided their labors almost equally between the East and the West ends—officiating at her majesty's Opera-House in the Haymarket at the daily noon prayer meeting, and also at an afternoon Bible reading, while in the evening they were generally present at the service in the Bow Road Hall. On two evenings of each week they returned to the Agricultural Hall in Islington.

The Christian World has published sixteen of Mr. Moody's sermons in full. We find them abounding in homely illustrations and touching anecdotes.

A SUDDEN CONVERSION.

Here is related the story of a conversion of remarkable quickness: "When I was in Manchester I went into the gallery one Sunday night to have a talk with a few inquirers, and while I was talking a business man came in and took his seat on the outskirts of the audience. I think at first he had come merely to criticise, and that he was a little skeptical. At last I saw he was in tears. I turned to him and said: 'My friend, what is your difficulty?' 'Well,' he said, 'Mr. Moody, the fact is, I cannot tell.' I said: 'Do you believe you are a sinner?' He said: 'Yes, I know that.' I said: 'Christ is able to save you;' and I used one illustration after another, but he did not see it. At last I used the ark, and I said: 'Was it Noah's feelings that saved him? Was it Noah's righteousness that saved him, or was it the ark?' 'Mr. Moody,' said he, 'I see it.' He got up and shook hands with me, and said: 'Good-night; I have to go. I have to go away on the train to-night, but I was determined to be saved before I went. I see it now.' I confess it seemed almost too sudden for me, and I was almost afraid it could not live. A few days after he came and touched me on the shoulder, and said: 'Do you know me?' I said: 'I know your face, but do not remember where I have seen you.' He said: 'Do not you remember the illustration of the ark?' I said: 'Yes.' He said: 'It has been all light ever since. I understand it now. Christ is the ark; he saves me; and I must get inside him.' When I went down to Manchester again and talked to the young friends there I found he was the brightest light among them."

The experience of the Scotch lassie is of a similar kind: "A friend of mine up in Scotland told me of a Scotch lassie who came to the inquiry-room, and the minister talked with her, and he said: 'Young woman, you go home and read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah.' And the Scotch girl threw up her hands and said: 'I cannot read. I cannot pray; Jesus, take me as I am.' She had got it. Sinner, just give yourself to Christ to-night. Ask him to take you as you are, and he will take you now. My friends, will you not, while I am speaking, just put your trust in Christ? Will you not this night receive the acceptable gift? Christ will take every sin upon him and just receive him as your Lord and Savior."

A DYING CHILD'S MESSAGE.

Speaking to parents, Mr. Moody related an incident of a precious word of a dying child:

"There was a man living in New York city, an elder in one of the Presbyterian churches there. His little boy had been sick some time, but he had not considered it dangerous. He came home one day, and his wife was in great trouble. When he came into the house he found her weeping. 'What is troubling you?' he said. 'Why,' she said, 'there has been a great change in our boy since you left this morning; I am afraid he is dying. I wish you would go in and see him, and, if he is, tell him so.' The father went in and took his seat at the head of the bed; he placed his hands on the forehead of the little boy, and he could see that death was stealing over him. He said to his boy: 'My son, do you know you are dying?' and the little fellow looked surprised, and he said: 'Am I, father? Is this death that I feel?' 'Yes, my son, you are dying.' 'Shall I die to-day?' 'Yes, you cannot live until the night.' And the little boy smiled and said: 'I will be with Jesus to-night, won't I?' 'Yes, my son, you will be with the Savior to-night;' and the father turned away to conceal a tear; and when the little fellow saw the tears rolling down his father's cheeks he said: 'Don't you weep for me, father; when I get to heaven I will go right straight to Jesus, and tell him that ever since I could remember you tried to lead me to him.'"—Methodist.

THAT fraud and impostor, known at Canton, Miss., as Horton, and at Wilmington, N. C., we believe, as Warren, has lately appeared in New Orleans. This time as Rev. Mr. Copeland, and as a Baptist minister from Philadelphia. He was called and installed as pastor of the First Baptist church, spent a Sunday here, officiated at a wedding, preached with great acceptability, was discovered, arrested, slipped away. The last we heard of him he was in Memphis, imposing on the railroad ticket agents, giving his name and address as the Rev. Mr. Warren, of Philadelphia, and under the force of exposure leaving his watch and cane as collaterals for his ticket. His sermon on Sunday night, the day before his arrest and flight, was, we are informed, a delightful one, on "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." The fact is, this man, especially to his young lady auditors, preaches divinely. We have no doubt he enjoys the gullability of the good people, both Methodist and Baptist. He certainly counts upon the love of humbug that is in the world. The religious world is his oyster, and he opens it here and there. Where he will break out next we cannot tell, but he is sure to turn up again.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—The Western Methodist says: "We have an interesting communication from Texas—others like it we have received, and published some of them, not only from Texas, but from California and Oregon. But perhaps correspondents forget in part what is due to our own section of the country. Certainly we have not failed to furnish readers a full share of information as to the attractions of Texas, Oregon, California, etc., and we even fear that we may have been indirectly responsible for the removal of persons to those States who will regret it all the days of their lives. Well, our correspondent this time must excuse us—this is not an immigration agency organ for those distant lands, whose lights, more than their shades, are set forth by correspondents. We would greatly prefer to hear from correspondents prepared to state the attractions of Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi and Arkansas—sections of the country which we believe to be as desirable as any on the continent. To the people living in these sections, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, our earnest advice, if solicited, would be: Stay where you are."

WE HAVE RECEIVED a handsomely printed programme of the commencements of the Chappell Hill Female College and Soule University, Chappell Hill, Texas. The exercises begin on Friday, June 4, and close on Wednesday, June 9. Several distinguished preachers and orators are to contribute to the interest of the occasion. Rev. J. M. Pugh delivers the commencement sermon; Rev. I. G. John is to address the children's meeting; Rev. H. V. Philpott delivers a sermon on Christian Education; W. H. Milburn, the blind preacher, and Rev. R. T. Nubors, deliver literary addresses. Judge J. D. Thomas is to make the baccalaureate address.

SUNDAY NIGHT PREACHING, under the auspices of the Protestant denominations, has been inaugurated in the Academy of Music, of this city. Rev. John Matthews preached there on Sunday night, May 30, to a full house.

A BUSINESS MEN'S daily prayer meeting is held at the Carondelet Street church at twelve o'clock M. This is the second week, and they are well attended and much interest is manifest.

IN THE New York Methodist of May 22 Dr. Crooks announces his retirement from the editorial direction of that paper. Prof. D. H. Wheeler is his successor.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request af a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they did not always have the amount at the time the year closed, they would pay up when they could, we were led to give notice to our agents and subscribers, about five years ago, that "no paper would be stopped without an explicit order." Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid always before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper, do not direct the postmaster to return your paper. That will not stop it. Do not write upon it and return it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When you subscribe state that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so expressly order, send a postal card to reach us any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected these two simple methods and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter including pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly thereupon you may be assured your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, heading the notice "second" or "third notice," when, on referring to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. But postmasters have been in many instances mistaken and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Attend to it yourself if you would stop, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

THE Cairo and St. Louis railroad recently completed, offers a new and delightful line of connection with the West. But few persons realize the grandeur and novelty of the scenery on this line, until scribed to us by eye-witnesses. Quite a number of flourishing young cities are passed on the route; a hugely intelligent, enterprising and hardy people thrive along the line, and afford a large local patronage to the road. The vast coal fields, which supply to a large extent the consumers of St. Louis, are on the line of this road. The coal of these mines is growing in favor, and we are informed that the smelting furnaces find it most admirably adapted to their purposes. This road, we said, transports one thousand tons per day to St. Louis, for the use of that city and points north and west. In reference to the varied and ever-changing landscapes we prefer to substitute an extract from the Cairo Evening Sun of April 27, 1875, and which, though it seems extravagant in expression, we are assured, by those who have been eye-witnesses of this scenery, corresponds with the impression made upon others. It is as follows:

"Leaving Jonesboro, and until we reach Murphreesboro, a new character of country, differing from anything we have ever seen east of the Rocky mountains. Is presented for our inspection. A Maybridge or a Watkins might photograph, a Bierstadt might paint, or a Bayard Taylor describe; but the scenery must be seen to be appreciated. I have passed over the Union Pacific railroad, have ridden horseback for months through old and New Mexico, have seen the beauties of the Colorado, and the wonders of the Yosemite valley, but have never yet seen anything to excel the scenery between Jonesboro and Murphreesboro on the Cairo and St. Louis railroad."

As this road runs down the east bank of the Mississippi river for miles before reaching the East St. Louis end, it also affords to passengers a most advantageous view of the great city.

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA, TERRE HAUTE AND INDIANAPOLIS ROUTE.—Parties going east by way of St. Louis will find this one of the finest lines in the country, as well as one of the shortest. The facilities presented cannot be surpassed. The roadway and rolling stock are as near perfection as to man hand can make them, and, as a consequence, the comfort of the traveler is assured and safety guaranteed. As the season approaches for the usual summer jaunt, the question of routes naturally comes up, and we would suggest to our readers who may have occasion to go east from St. Louis the above line, so ably managed by Maj. John E. Simpson.

GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—The New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago Railroad Company have not been wanting in the energy and enterprise necessary to place the roads on their main line and connections in fine condition. The accommodations on this line are unsurpassed, and are equal to any reasonable desire. This is the only route by which the quiet climate spoken of in our last issue can be correspondingly reached. For full information call on A. D. Sheldon, Esq., general ticket agent, corner of Camp and Common streets.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of G. W. Dunbar & Sons. These gentlemen put up the purest and best fruit syrups of any in the city. They make a specialty of syrups for family use. Their establishment is at Nos. 10, 12 and 14 St. Louis street, where orders can be sent. It is not convenient to call on them direct, any wholesale family grocery will fill orders at factory prices.

ROUND TRIP TICKETS to Europe can be had for the Inman Royal Steamship Line at the office of the agents, Messrs. C. J. Shepherd & Co. Ticket good for twelve months, over this stanch and strictly first-class line, will greatly cheapen the trip. Every one intending to go to Europe should call on the excellent agents for information. Office, 15 Gravier street.

FINE FURNITURE AT CLOSING OUT PRICES.—Messrs. Mitchell & Rammelsberg, in the Moresque building, corner of Poydras and Camp, are closing out their stock of most superb furniture at cost prices, for the purpose of retiring from business. See advertisement in this issue of the Advocate.

SEE advertisement of C. P. Atmore, headed "Go North and East via the Louisville and Great Southern Railroad Line." The advantages of the route we have spoken of repeatedly and at length before. They can be seen at once by reading the advertisement.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.—We call attention to the large and well assorted drug store of H. J. Rivet, successor to E. Monteuse & Co., corner of Rienville and Chartres streets. His advertisement will be found in our columns to-day.

WOOD AND COAL.—We can assure those who have not tried the wood and coal furnished by Mr. H. H. Hussman, at 102 Calliope street, that he furnishes good wood, and at reasonable rates. See advertisement.

TRUNKS and valises, well made, and at prices of which we feel sure no reasonable man will complain, can be bought at the steam trunk manufactory depot of A. Ensminger, 36 Magazine street.

CHANCE FOR AN ORGAN.—See advertisement of Philip Werlein, in another column, of fine and large church organ at half price.

Farm, Garden and Household.

When to Harvest Grain.

Perhaps not one farmer of a score harvests his crops at that stage of their development when they will yield the largest quantity of grain and fodder. Wheat, rye, barley and oats all pass through several stages of growth before the grain attains perfect maturity. There is the period of bloom, the period when the grain is in the milk stage of growth, the dough stage, the mature stage of growth, and the dead-ripe condition. If cereal grain of any sort be examined when in the milk state it will be seen that the kernels are larger than they will be at any other period. The bran-envelope of every kernel is distended like a puff ball, with a thick, white liquid. If the crop were harvested at that period the kernels would shrink to about one-fourth their uniform size. After a few days the contents of the kernels pass into a state of soft dough, then to hard dough, and soon every kernel becomes fully matured, although the contents are not yet hard. This is the period to thrust in the cradle, or to start the horse reaper. Harvested at this stage of development, the yield of grain will be larger, the kernels will be heavier, the bran will be thinner, the percentage of flour will be greater and whiter, and a bushel, by measure, will weigh more than if the crop were harvested at any other period. These suggestions will be found to hold correct in regard to every kind of cereal grain. Besides this, if a crop be harvested at the period designated, the straw, if properly cured, will make a larger quantity of excellent fodder.

The old rule with many farmers in judging of the proper period to harvest wheat used to be when the straw, for a few inches above the ground, appeared ripe and of an orange color. But this will be found an incorrect guide with most varieties of wheat. In many varieties this sign will be found entirely wanting. Some farmers wait until most of the ears of wheat, rye and barley bend downward with a graceful bow. But in many instances the ears of wheat maintain an erect position even until every kernel has passed the dead-ripe state. Again, fields of wheat are frequently met with where a large portion of the ears are hanging downward even when the grain is in the milk stage of development.

The color of the straw is always the most reliable guide with many producers of wheat. But this indication of the maturity of the grain will always vary in proportion as the soil, locality and variety differ. Wheat produced on certain mixtures of soil, when one views the crop from a short distance, will often appear quite too green to be harvested, even when the ears are all erect and every kernel has passed the dough stage and appears quite hard.

The correct way to determine when the proper period has arrived to harvest grain is to walk among the standing straw, pluck one ear here and another there, examine the kernels throughout the entire field, and if the grain of many of the small ears is yet in the milk stage, while a large proportion of the heads or panicles indicate a point between the dough stage and perfect maturity of the grain, the crop should be harvested without delay.

The management of the crop after it is cut will have an important influence on the quality of the grain and the straw.

How to Make Good Biscuits.

The following is from Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, the manufacturer of Goodwyn's Eureka Yeast Powders. We commend his powders and his recipe for biscuits:

The whole process of making biscuits, where yeast powders are used, is a quick one. The stove or oven should be well heated beforehand. If a strong and uniform heat is not kept up during the process of baking the result will almost certainly be a failure. Biscuits, as soon as baked, should be taken to the table, and not allowed to stand and dry and harden on the stove.

Having measured into a sieve two pints of flour, put in say a partly heaping teaspoonful of salt; then of yeast powders—taken directly from the box—put in two teaspoonfuls, well heaped up, mix a little and sift all together; use of lard say a dessert-spoonful or the bulk of a good sized hen egg; time need not be taken to rub it into the dry flour; this, where yeast powders are used, is a disadvantage rather than otherwise. Now take a half-pint dipper, once full and a half of cold water, and pour the whole directly into the flour; mix. Some use a spoon at the beginning, but the hand seems preferable throughout as a mixer. The dough should be soft; if found too soft, add a little flour, and work only enough to make it smooth; roll tolerably thin; cut out and put into a smooth baking pan, with a fork—a wooden one is best; prick each biscuit twice, then set them in the stove or oven immediately. In three minutes they will be up, and in four minutes more will be baked, after which the stove door should be opened and left ajar for them to "soak," as cooks express it, for about three minutes, when they will be ready for the table.

And now, if anybody will follow the above directions, using at the same time good flour, pure lard, and a yeast powder whose chemical constituents and proportions are what they should be (and if diligent search is made a powder of this description may be found,) they will be certain to have what everybody wants—biscuits that are elegant, palatable and healthful.

INVITE THE SMALL BIRDS.—We may induce them to come around us by putting up old, discarded fruit and oyster cans, etc. Place them in the trees so that you can fasten them by driving a small nail through the corner of the cans, being careful to place them so they will be shaded when the leaves come out. Or you may place them on the shady side of some building, driving two nails through the edge of the can into the building. These birds will accept such houses for their summer homes, in which to rear their young. All this is cheap. Then why not all enjoy these birds' company and music? All living in the country, in villages or the suburbs of our large cities may do it. I have about two hundred of these bird nests around my buildings and in my orchard of some sixty-five acres. I hope to see them more common elsewhere. These birds harm nothing, but destroy many larvæ, also the perfect insect; and in addition—and this comes in to make up life with me—as I pass through my grounds daily, troubled it may be on all sides, I am also cheered in the midst of my cares by the constant and pleasant company and music of these birds. I bless the Giver of all good for the birds.—Rural World.

A SCARECROW.—It is well known that blue and scarlet colors in juxtaposition cause a dazzling effect on the eye. These colors strung on a line and placed over strawberry beds produce a puzzling effect on birds, and no bird will enter the garden while these colors flutter in the air. Pieces of blue and scarlet calico should be cut about one and a half feet in length, and tied to a line one foot apart. An old flannel petticoat will supply a large quantity of inexpensive scarlet strips. This line is to be supported by poles six feet in height from the strawberry beds. To support strawberries, keeping them clean and enabling them to ripen all round, take a piece of stout wire a yard in length, bend it at right angles ten inches from each end, bend the space between the right angles into a curve. Stamp these two ends six inches in depth into the earth close to the strawberry plants; then draw the fruit over the wire, each plant requiring two. To prevent rusting, place the wires in creosote three or four days and then dry them.—Gardeners' Magazine.

A TEST FOR EGGS.—Among the minor troubles of city life is the difficulty of procuring a regular supply of fresh eggs. When we cannot remove our woes, the next best thing is to try to understand them. So we devote this paragraph to what will interest all out of hearing of the cheerful sounds of the barn-yard. An egg is generally called fresh when it has been laid only one or two days in summer, and two to six days in winter. The shell being porous, the water in the interior evaporates, and leaves a cavity of greater or less extent. The yolk of the egg sinks too, as may be easily seen by holding it toward a candle or the sun; and, when shaken, a slight shock is felt if the egg is not fresh. To determine the precise age of eggs, dissolve about four ounces of common salt in a quart of pure water, and then immerse the egg. If it is one day old it will descend to the bottom of the vessel; but if three days it will float in the liquid. If more than five days old it will come to the surface, and project above it in proportion to its increased age.

BEE-HIVES.—Of 2,000,000 bee-hives in the United States it is reported: Every hive yields on an average a little over 22 pounds of honey, the average price of which is twenty-five cents a pound; so, after paying their way, the bees present a revenue of $8,800,000. To reckon it another way, they make a clean gain of over one pound of pure honey for every man, woman and child in the United States. Over 23,000,000 pounds of wax are made by these industrious workers. Keeping bees is one of the most profitable investments the people can make of their money. The profits arising from the sale of surplus honey average from 50 to 200 per cent. on the capital invested, says an exchange.—Boston Cultivator.

EMERSON'S TRADE BINDER MARK
DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, leding careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelet-holes in last strip, draw them TIGHTLY, causing the steel strips to close on the papers like a vise, and fasten firmly by "belaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and index in front.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fifth instant:

On Wednesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a further decline in futures at New York, while Liverpool was reported dull at previous rates, with sales of 10,000 bales. We consequently noticed but little inquiry, and up to 12 M. had heard of only one sale of 121 bales at Tuesday's rates, after which, as some factors desired to realize and met the demand more freely, a few buyers came forward, and the entire business summed up 600 bales. During Thursday morning it continued dull, and in the absence of any active competition among buyers factors who desired to realize were compelled to make concessions of ⅛c. On Friday, under discouraging dispatches and the pressure on the market of several crops which were ordered to be closed out by the end of the month, factors met the demand still more freely, and 1,750 bales changed hands at irregular prices, indicating a pretty general falling off of about ⅛c., making the total decline for the three days 1/16@¼c., and in some cases ⅜c. A large part of the stock unsold is held at above the ruling rates, awaiting a favorable reaction.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3,500 bales, and, adding 100 bales to Tuesday's report, a total for the week of 8,150, against 11,900 last week and 18,050 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 877,540 bales, against 1,191,063 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 285,577 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 285,191—3,408,108, against 3,693,300. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is a decrease of 10,289 bales to Great Britain, 3,768 to France and 184,065 to other foreign ports. SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday, the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $40, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting. This rule does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material, for which pleasant positions will be assigned to all persons desiring it.

All persons having selected lots for the purpose of building tents are required to report to the trustees, one month prior to the date of the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees; William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran, J. H. Keller, B. O. L. Rayne, G. W. W. Goodwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting at the Hemulogton camp ground, near Crystal Springs, Miss., will begin on Thursday, August 12, 1875. Preachers and people are cordially invited to attend, and to come in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. The accommodations for visitors will be enlarged. The meeting will be on what is called "the self-sustaining plan."

H. H. MONTGOMERY, P. E.

THE District Conference of the Summit district, Mississippi Conference, will convene in Amite City on the fifteenth of July, 1875 Bishop Paine is expected to preside.

Will the preachers please forward me the names of their delegates who expect to attend, and how they will come? Our people are ready to accommodate all who can come. We expect to have our church dedicated at that time.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The forest fires have again broken out in the mountains of Delaware and Sullivan counties, New York, doing much damage. The village of Bethel, Sullivan county, was surrounded by fire for two days, and was only saved after a hard fight.

A prominent and wealthy farmer named William Corbin, of Delaware county, was surrounded by fire, while fighting the flames in his woods, and burned to death. Two other men, similarly engaged, were badly burned and narrowly escaped with life, near Mamaynk valley. In Sullivan county the fire was accidentally started, and in a few hours thousands of acres of valuable timber, a mill and three hundred thousand feet of lumber were destroyed. Near the towns of Fallsburg and Mamakating conflagrations are so fierce that families have been obliged to fly from their homes to save their lives, leaving all their household goods, stock, etc., to be destroyed.

CHICAGO, June 1.—In the National Temperance Convention, this afternoon, Hon. Henry Wilson made a forcible appeal for the cause of temperance. At the conclusion of the Vice President's remarks, which were received with a good deal of enthusiasm, the chairman said "he felt that the presence of Vice President Wilson at this time was an indication that the time was coming when there will be a man in the presidency who will represent the friends of temperance." (Loud and continued applause.)

NEW YORK, June 2.—The dedicatory services of the new Masonic temple in this city begun this morning with a procession of Masons, which was probably the largest, most imposing and most important civic display yet witnessed here. In all directions, along Broadway and Fifth avenue, and the principal streets near these leading thoroughfares, flags and bunting were flung to the breeze. As the time for the procession to move came on, the streets and windows and door-steps of the houses on the line of march were filled with people.

GALVESTON, June 2.—In the civil rights case in the United States District Court yesterday, against Manager Greenwall, of the Opera House, the judge decided that the demurrer be reinstated and the indictment quashed, on the ground of the act being unconstitutional and the indictment not alleging that the complainant was a citizen of the United States. It is thought that the other cases will be decided in a similar manner.

MEMPHIS, June 2.—The Avalanche estimates the wheat crop this year in the country tributary to Memphis as the largest since 1859.

LOUISVILLE, June 3.—The damage by the storm last night was quite extensive. Besides the great injury to the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, many small cottages were demolished, roofs blown off and other damages reported. The shops of the Louisville Iron and Bridge Company were blown down, entailing a loss of about $30,000. The estimated loss at the Masonic Home is $30,000.

PORT JERVIS, June 3.—The forest fires continue. Half a dozen villages were destroyed and several lives lost.

OMAHA, June 4.—Reports recently received from those portions of the southwestern part of Nebraska which have been severely afflicted by the grasshoppers this spring show that the grasshoppers are fast taking flight, going northwest. Immense clouds of them are seen daily, very high in the air.

MEMPHIS, June 4.—One hundred bags of new wheat were received from north Mississippi to-day. The crop in that section is reported as universally good.

POTTSVILLE, PA., June 6.—At Mahoney City to-morrow all the collieries that had started last week, and were stopped by raiders, will resume work. The military have made preparations to secure protection to all, and insure the continuance of the work, and with this view all members of the militia who were absent when the orders were given to march have to-day joined their companies, which to-morrow will have their full complement of men. It is thought it may be found necessary to send troops to the vicinity of Glen Carbon and Ashland should the raiders continue as they did on Friday, compelling small mining operatives to suspend work.

SAVANNAH, GA., June 6.—The will of Miss Mary Telfair, who died last week, aged eighty-six years, daughter of ex Gov. Telfair, was filed in the office of Probate and Record on Saturday. Several munificent bequests to societies are made. To the Georgia Historical Society about $175 000; Independent Presbyterian church, Savannah, $80,000; Presbyterian church, Augusta, $30,000, and to the Hodgson Institution, Telfairville, the Christian Church, endowment of Telfair Hospital for Females, endowment of Telfair Academy of Art and Science, and other societies and numerous personal legacies are made, including handsome bequests to the colored family of servants. The estate is valued at over $1 000,000.

MOBILE, June 7.—The Circuit Court of the United States met here this morning, Mr. Justice Bradley and District Judge Bruce presiding. No grand jury being present, District Attorney Duskin announced that he had not asked for one, because since the last term of the court no felony and no serious violation of law had been reported or returned by any commissioner of the district. This district embraces all the counties in which the arrests were made by Hester and Beach last summer and fall.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 28.—Congress has approved the contract with David Boyle Blair for extensive railroads and telegraphs in Mexico.

The vote to impeach the President failed by 128 to 10.

LONDON, June 1.—Two hundred houses were destroyed by fire in Cabanal, Spain.

The Aberdeen Iron Company, the failure of which has been announced, gave employment to five thousand people.

Several additional small failures are announced.

LONDON, June 7.—At Lifu, Loyalty Islands, on the night of March 29, there was a sharp shock of an earthquake, followed by others the next day, and on the evening of the third a fearful shock occurred, doing much damage to buildings. It was succeeded by a tidal wave which swept away three villages, causing immense destruction of life and property.

Messrs. Odger and Wicks, delegates appointed by the Federal Union of Agricultural Labor to make an examination of the Mississippi valley for the purpose of ascertaining its suitability for the settlement of emigrants, will leave for the United States in two weeks.

BERLIN, June 8.—A grand banquet is to be given here to-day to Carl Schurz by the American residents of Berlin and members of the Diet and professors of the Berlin University.

From the Work.

PENSACOLA STATION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed my missionary collections for the present year. Early in April I made the call for the foreign missions, and raised every cent assessed—$25—the Sabbath school contributing $8 10 of the amount.

Two weeks ago I notified the Sabbath school that we would have a Sunday school missionary meeting, at three P. M., for domestic missions. They responded to the amount of $5. Yesterday the matter was presented to the congregation, and in a very short time the collection amounted to $21 35 $2 having been paid previously, making in all $28 35. The assessment was $25. May the great Head of the church increase the missionary spirit and zeal in the church, and pour his blessings upon them in this charge! You will not be astonished when I tell you that several of my Sabbath school scholars have been brought into the church since the first Sunday school missionary meeting. The Sunday school in increasing every Sabbath.

JOSEPH S. CUBRY.

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 31 1875.

A CABLE DISPATCH of May 25 says: "The Archbishop of Canterbury, writing to a peer, says: 'I have consulted with my episcopal brethren concerning the Moody movement. Although I do not speak in their name, I may say that the consultation has greatly strengthened my views on the subject. It is impossible not to take the deepest interest in the movement which has been so wonderfully successful in drawing great masses of persons to hear simple addresses on gospel doctrines. Those clergymen who have held aloof have not done so from a lack of interest, but because, although they rejoiced that the truth was being urged upon the people's consciences, circumstances attended the movement which they were unable consistently to approve of. I confess that my original objections still remain. I cannot but fear that the counsels given after the meetings are often crude errors of doctrine. It is also reported that the revivalist ignore the full scriptural teaching with regard to repentance. I trust that, if these allegations are true, a friendly remonstrance will induce the missionaries hereafter to avoid these obstacles to their success.'

"The archbishop concludes by quoting from Luke ix, 50, and says: 'I rejoice when Christ is preached whether regularly or irregularly, and trust that the clergy will endeavor to deepen the salutary impressions produced by the revivalists.'"

THE pews in Dr. John Hall's new church on Fifth avenue, New York, were sold on Monday of last week. There are in the church three hundred and fifty-two pews. The assessed valuation per pew ranges from $300 to $6,000. The first choice was bought for a premium of $1,501, by Alexander Stewart, who took a $6,000 pew. One hundred and fifty-five pews were sold at premiums varying from $1,550 to $10, the amount realized in premiums alone being over $71,000. The assessed valuation of all the pews in the church is $600,000. The church is to be supported by an annual assessment on the appraised value of the seats. This assessment is now six per cent., which is to continue until changed by the trustees, and which would give an income of $18,000.

DEATH takes the fairest of our possessions and makes the treasures that remain doubly precious.—Duff Porter.

The Pests of the West.

WHAT THE PEOPLE ARE DOING—GREAT DISTRESS.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—For the past three days the grasshoppers in this vicinity have been marching in a southwesterly direction. Whenever they strike a field or garden they leave scarcely a vestige of vegetation. Whole fields of grain are devoured in a few hours, and the sections which they visit are laid waste. However, their ravages are not universal. They seem to collect in armies and all march in one direction, turning aside for nothing. Some sections are devastated, while others are free from the scourge. Many plans are being devised for their destruction. The most successful appears to be that of digging deep trenches in front of them and driving them into them, and then destroying them. Had this course been pursued from the time they began marching there would have been none. As it is, we fear most of the small grain will be destroyed, although the crops of corn and late potatoes will, it is hoped, be safe.

FORT SCOTT, MO., May 27.—The grasshoppers in this vicinity are not near so plenty as a short time since. What has become of them is not known. The crops are looking forward, and the farmers are a little more encouraged. In the northeast part of the county, around Boonesville, they have done an immense amount of damage, eating everything green they could come across.

NEBRASKA CITY, May 27.—The grasshoppers are beginning to leave this county, and are moving in a southerly direction. The reports from farmers are more encouraging to-day, only a small portion of this county being afflicted with the grasshoppers, and the people have generally been more scared than hurt. Corn can be planted where small grain has been badly damaged, and thus only the seed will be lost. Five miles east of the river all kinds of grain never looked better at this time of year. The farmers in Johnson county met in council at Independence yesterday to devise ways and means to relieve the destitute. Reports from some sections state that the people are living on leaves. A committee was appointed to see the bankers and get money at low rates to relieve the sufferers, and an address was issued calling on the people in the country for help to enable the farmers to replant the crops.

RELIABLE INTELLIGENCE FROM WESTERN MISSOURI.

The grasshopper plague in Missouri still continues to be a subject of interest, and reliable information on the matter has been somewhat difficult to obtain. Many of the stories told seemed exaggerations, and it was difficult to believe that such ravages as those reported could be real. There is no doubt, however, that at least in some portions of the State the accounts have not been overdrawn. Rev. J. K. Martin, of Kingsville, Johnson county, who is in St. Louis on his way to Monmouth, Ill., to procure seed for replanting, confirms the report of the devastation in his neighborhood. He says that four fifths of all the wheat, oats, rye, corn, flax, meadow, wild grass and garden products in his region are utterly destroyed. He mentioned a couple of instances as illustrations. At a meeting of members of his congregation last Wednesday reports were made in regard to the wheat crop of those present. They represented about seven hundred acres, all of which, with the exception of about forty acres, was so utterly destroyed that on a casual inspection it could not be told that any wheat crop had ever grown there. The forty acres left were in the center of a two-hundred acre field, and the patch was surrounded by grasshoppers, making a clean sweep as they converged to the center. At some distance away was a twenty-five-acre field of wheat, a foot high, growing thick and strong, and beside it fifteen acres of pasture. The two fields, being surrounded by plowed ground, escaped attack by the grasshoppers until last Wednesday, when they made an assault on it after cleaning off every green thing in the neighborhood. On Saturday afternoon, when Mr. Martin left for St. Louis, there was not a blade of wheat or grass left of it. The stalks were eaten to the ground so closely that the buts only could be discovered by a close inspection. He reports that many of the grasshoppers, having nothing more to eat, were flying away, but that the larger portion were dying on the ground of starvation. Mr. Martin formerly lived at Monmouth, and his reasons for going there for seed are two-fold: First, it is thought that seed grown in the North will be better adapted to late crops; and secondly, he expects to get the most if not all the supplies gratuitously. The Missouri Pacific Company has kindly agreed to furnish free transportation for these seeds. He will get every kind suitable for planting so late in the season—Northern corn, millet, buckwheat, turnips, etc.

THE Glen Rock Item, published at Glen Rock, Pa., says: "Hoffer, the father of Hofferism, which system of religious faith has recently created quite a stir among the people in this section of the country, died in Carlisle, Pa., on the fourteenth of May, aged about thirty-nine years. His death was caused by a hemorrhage resulting in the bursting of a blood vessel."

GREEDINESS digs its own grave with its teeth.

May Festival of the Methodist Sunday School in Opelousas.

MR. EDITOR: I take it for granted that anything which marks the growth of that seed of Christian churches—Sunday schools—cannot be without a certain degree of interest to the readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I will therefore strive to bring before them a pen-picture of the May festival of the Methodist Sunday school in Opelousas.

The fifteenth of May was a perfect day. At an early hour in the morning a stir began in the town and its vicinity, and by eleven A. M. several hundred persons were assembled at the appointed place, in a grove just outside of Opelousas. Of course I followed the crowd, and found myself in a large forest glade, a circular, open space bounded by immense oaks, and magnolias whose great white chalices perfumed the air. Under some fine trees a large platform had been raised several feet from the ground, and, surmounting this platform, a smaller one wreathed and arched by vines and garlands of flowers, with a right royal seat in the midst of it, intended, I understood, for the May Queen. A little after eleven A. M. the melodeon was struck by a skillful hand, and through one of the forest vistas slowly approached a procession of at least fifty children, divided into five classes, each class bearing at its head a white banner, with appropriate scriptural texts emblazoned on both sides. On the leading banner was: "Opelousas Sunday School;" and on the reverse side: "Feed my Lambs."

I have seen many beautiful and gorgeous processions in my life, where all the appliances of great wealth and taste exhausted themselves in the display, but I do not remember to have ever been more deeply impressed than by this simple procession, interpreting, as it did, all that is loveliest and gentlest in the Christian faith. The tender blue May sky bent over it; the patriarchal oaks seemed to stand witnesses on either side; the sun glinted through the branches upon the snowy dresses of the girls; the innocent, reverent faces of the little ones, who with folded hands followed their banners as if the words of God inscribed on them were leading them straightway to some unknown, Pisgah, whence the "beautiful land" would meet them face to face.

As they reached the platform the fresh young voices burst suddenly into that beautiful hymn: "O praise the Lord." They sang it with an enthusiasm which thrilled the crowd beneath them, and touched many hearts which probably never before had felt: "God be praised." It is not preachers who always reach stubborn hearts.

In the prayers and hymns which followed I noticed the same reverence and enthusiasm which had struck me in the procession. Children are admirably taught in a Sunday school who approach sacred subjects with a degree of quiet reverence and attention which are decidedly antagonistic to childish natures. These had evidently been taught to recognize the holy of holies, and with all the powers of their young souls to do it honor. Too much credit cannot be awarded to the Rev. J. F. Scurlock and his able coadjutors, Mrs. Hayes, Miss Donald, Mrs. Stein and Mrs. M. Lewis for their Sunday school work in Opelousas. Under the supervision of Mr. Scurlock the school has increased and is increasing; and more than a mere addition of numbers is the thorough teaching of the scholars, and the zeal and reverence which seems to inspire them. After prayer and hymn came different exercises, declamations and dialogues. "Sabbath Bells," and "Work, for the Night is Coming," were sung admirably.

At the close of the regular Sabbath school exercises a young girl, personating "Spring," delivered a poem, an introduction to another and different procession which was seen advancing from the depths of the forest. With no solemn step, but flower-decked and flower-crowned, smiling and joyful, the May Queen and her court, greeted by a lively carol, took possession of the platform of flowers. In the twinkling of an eye the scene was changed. It was a fairy panorama of light and color framed in by the dark background of the forest-trees. It was what Leigh Hunt calls "color upon color," yet each harmonizing their brilliant contrasts. An exquisite poem—"Bring flowers to crown our lovely Queen"—was recited admirably by one of the boys. Each of the court personated some special flower which she wore in garlands on head and dress. An usher announced them in turn, and from the rose to the clover blossom each was furnished with appropriate addresses in verse, written by a resident of Opelousas. The last, a magnolia blossom, draped in gray Spanish moss, was made the subject of a poem, where the flower, with its funeral garb, was called the type of Louisiana—beautiful through all her grief and desolation. At the close the fairy queen and her court, singing "Heather Bells," passed in procession before the throne—a graceful and final touch to a picture which seemed caught from some "realm of fairie," and unrolled before our delighted eyes.

Of course there followed the usual feasting al fresco on every imaginable delicacy.

This May drama, with its influences of sky and earth, its solemn and vital truths, and beautiful, playful fancies, was a greater drama than a careless spectator could well understand. He felt himself impressed with the deep meanings of the little army with symbol banners. It was like a grand fugue rising and swelling through the majestic forest into the fathomless spaces of blue sky. It seemed to interpret for him his higher needs through the innocence and unquestioning faith of the standard bearers; and while the mind was still lifted to heights in whose clear, pure air it could not long remain without a strain of its powers, by a sudden transition the beauty of the earth in the May Queen and her court was brought before us. We felt it was all good. The earth, with its stains and soils, its partings and pains, holds within its bosom many May days such as the one I have striven to chronicle—days full of inward aspirations and outward beauty, where each reacts on the other—days when heaven is nearer and dearer, because a faint shadow of its glory rests on the earth.

Camp Meeting.

The time appointed for holding the Seashore camp meeting July 21 is fast approaching. It is time to begin to make all needful preparation, to be in readiness, and to be there in time, quietly settled in camp, and prepared to enter with interest and zeal into the very first service of the encampment.

The trustees had an interesting meeting on the grounds on the third instant. They were met there by several preachers and laymen from Mobile, Moss Point and other localities, meeting there to arrange for the better comfort of their families and friends. Not the least interesting part of their meeting was a warm-spirited prayer meeting, in which the success and usefulness of the approaching camp meeting was not forgotten.

The trustees are having the grounds put in more perfect order, and are making important arrangements to secure the comfort and accommodation of the people. There will be an increase of tent-room upon that of last year. Already several new private tents have been contracted for, and will be completed in due time. To this point we call attention: of having all improvements, repairs, etc., completed early, that there be no encroachment upon the time of the public services. Let every one from this time interest himself in the objects of the camp meeting. Make it a subject of conversation among your friends, and get their minds interested also, and come up to this annual gathering in the spirit to work and labor for the success of the meeting and the salvation of souls.

TRUSTEE.

Collections for Missions.

MR. EDITOR: Feeling that we in the Mississippi Conference ought to do more in this good and important work than we have been doing for some years past, we have attempted to inaugurate the plan of having a meeting in behalf of missions in each church, and congregation in the Brookhaven district. Hard as the times are, the results so far exceed the expectations of the most sanguine—are very encouraging. We think the reports to be made at our next Conference session will be very gratifying to all who are interested in the cause of missions.

Will not the presiding elders of our Conference try the plan? Some brethren may be able to do more in that work than others. Such may be utilized by being sent into other pastoral charges to help in this work. Two preachers might assist each other at their meetings. Use every available man in this work, and as often as you can. I have found Rev. H. F. Johnson to be eminently useful in this good work in the Brookhaven district.

Seashore Camp Meeting

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent Benwood has instructed us "How to Make Cloth Tents," and it is to be hoped that the good people of Mississippi and the adjoining States of Louisiana and Alabama will avail themselves of the information at the Seashore camp meeting, soon to be held.

My mind had not been free from doubt as to the wisdom of the rule of your trustees requiring tents to be of "value of not less than $40;" but as this has reference only to "permanent tents;" and "does not preclude the use of temporary tents, constructed of cloth or other material"—which, I suppose, was the intention from the first—I am well satisfied now with the rule for permanent tents. I see its propriety in giving to the Seashore camp ground character and permanency.

What I desire by this communication is to call the attention of the people to this point of temporary tents in immediate connection with the manner of construction set forth by your correspondent. There are many people not prepared to erect a permanent tent, who can extemporize a very comfortable tent at most moderate expense. Before the war such things were common. Then our good people, and others too, used to travel thirty to forty miles in their wagons, with provisions for man and beast, and spend a holy week in camp. The shadow of a grand old oak or magnolia furnished them tent by day, and the wagon, covered in, afforded lodgings for the night.

Many of our people complain of hard times and want of means, and with good cause, I know; but with all the hardness of the times there are very few who cannot construct themselves a temporary tent at very little cost, and afford to enjoy a week of prayer and praise and worship in the grove.

I hope to meet many at Seashore this year from the interior of the country, coming both by land and rail, and from all along the coast. Brethren, come up to the camp meeting. Come with your families and neighbors and friends. Come praying and expecting the blessings of Heaven upon you and them.

Last year we had a precious meeting, the influence of which yet lives in the heart of many a follower of the Master. Pray, brethren, that the approaching meeting may be yet more glorious because of the presence and power of the Highest to awaken, convert, sanctify and save.

Periodicals.

WARE'S VALLEY MONTHLY is the title of a new journal published at St. Louis by Charles E. Ware & Co. William M. Leftwich, editor. The first number is very good indeed, containing a large variety of well-prepared and instructive articles. It promises to be one of our best monthly periodicals, and will doubtless have a large circulation. Price, $3.25 per annum.

PETERSON'S LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE for July is already on our table. It is richly stored with fashion plates, patterns and illustrations interesting and perhaps useful to the ladies. Published by Charles J. Peterson, Philadelphia, at $2 a year.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL for May has Hawks and Hawkins' History of Astronomy, Decimal Fractions, Longitude and Time, and many other instructive articles.

THE Southern Cultivator for June has been received. It is an excellent number, and well filled with information adapted to the season and to our Southern country.

THE Gardeners' Monthly for June has been received.

RUM gives us a million drunkards, a hundred thousand idiots and insane, and nearly or quite a thousand murders and suicides a year.

PASSING BY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DOES IT CAN, OUR TUMOR."

'And they told him that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.'

O rich man, from your lofty seat,
Seeing the cold, the sick, the poor,
Weep not for nothing, or needlessly weep,
To whom even heaven no means can keep:
Why to you, who enjoy all things without measure,
Should mercy or love be so far pleasure,
Let not the blessed moment fly—
Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

Is there a sinner tired of sin,
Longing a new life to begin?
But a little the gates of hope are past,
And all the world of love are fast:
Earth's best pleasures, like withering grass,
And even the very heavens as brass:
Turn not away so pitilessly—
Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

Self hardened man of stern scale, blind eagle;
Who runs, with heart like desert isle
And in the sea of deepest cold love,
Whom nothing save the world can move;
At your wife's low, imploring speech,
Your backward thrust no sword can reach,
Look your child lifts a wondering eye—
Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

Oh, all ye foolish ones, who feel
A sudden fear, like peering steel,
When your dead hearts within you burn,
And pierced me sides "Return, return,"
Why at the sweet impulse flee,
Love's wave wash back from your tired feet—
Knowing not Him who comes so nigh—
Jesus of Nazareth passing by?

He must not pass! Hold Him secure;
In likeness of his lowliness poor;
In many a sick soul, disguised;
In misery of the afflicted one;
Despising quite certain it is he—
In every form of cruelty:
And when the Greatest Him upon high,
Desires he will not pass thee by.

The Moral State of Adam at His Creation.

MR. EDITOR: I see that the brother with whom I have been discussing this question has written another article on the subject. He calls the theory, that God made man holy at the creation, "Calvinistic." If so, then Wesley and Watson were Calvinists in this regard. He says that his first proposition has not even been mentioned, and thus restates it: "That God cannot, in the nature and relation of things, create moral holiness or sin." Of course a holy God cannot create sin. But that he can create holiness, or rather can create a moral agent in a holy state, or with a holy disposition, I think is in perfect accord with both reason and revelation; and I thought I had shown this in my former articles. That holiness which is a voluntary conformity to law of course cannot be conferred by any extrinsic power; it must spring from within—from the will of the agent. But this is not the only kind of holiness of which a moral being is capable, or rather the exercise of the will is not the only medium through which holiness may be conferred upon a moral being. There is certainly a holiness of disposition, a holiness of the affections and of the conscience, which God may confer upon a moral being, not against his will, but before there is capacity or time to exercise the will. There was no violence done to Adam's will in creating him in a holy state, because his will was not then in exercise. It did not bind his will. It did not necessitate his continuance in holiness. He was perfectly free, and possessed the power to continue holy or to become unholy, as he might choose. Where there is capacity or opportunity to exercise the will, God himself cannot force holiness upon a man; but where this capacity does not exist, or there has not been time to exercise the will, he certainly may and does confer holiness. What else does he do in the case of all who die in infancy? We believe and teach that all are born with depraved natures; that nothing unholy can enter heaven; and yet that all who die in infancy do go to heaven. How do they obtain a fitness for heaven? They are born unholy; they cannot exercise their wills; cannot perform any condition in order to their becoming holy; cannot possess a voluntary conformity to God's law, either in heart or in life; yet their natures must somehow become holy before they can enter heaven. Of necessity God must himself perform the entire work. The Holy Spirit sanctifies and fits them for heaven some time between their entrance into life and their exit from it. Will any one say that the holiness of the dying infant is only innocence and freedom from depravity, and not an actual conformity of the heart to the image of God?—not a real sanctification of the moral nature? If so, then an adult needs no higher degree or kind of holiness than mere freedom from depravity—needs not to be wholly sanctified. It is true that in the case of an adult there may and ought to be a higher degree of holiness than in the case of an infant, but the kind is the same, leaving out the element of voluntariness, which is simply an impossible condition in the case of the infant. Now if God can make the dying infant holy, so fit it for heaven, Christ having died to save it, he could certainly have created Adam with a moral nature inclined to virtue, but at the same time endowed with freedom of will, by which he might continue holy or become sinful, as he should choose. The one is as easy and as consistent with reason as the other.

Further, that God could and did create Adam in a morally holy state, when he molded him "in his own image and likeness," is most clearly proved, as I have shown in a former article, by the two following facts: 1. The regeneration and sanctification of the soul, under the provisions of the atonement, is represented in the New Testament not simply as pardon of past sin and removal of depravity, but such a renewal of the moral nature as gives it an actual and positive tendency toward virtue and God, or makes it actually holy. 2. This renewal is represented as simply a restoration to the soul of the image of God in which man was at first created. Thus every soul that rises to the high attainments set before us in the gospel as the birthright of all Christians, viewed in connection with the above-named facts, is a living witness that Adam was created in something higher than a mere state of innocence and freedom from moral corruption.

I must now notice some of the special points made by my opponent. He says: "Equilibrium is the utmost limit to the organization of a moral agent; for that which is more than straight must be crooked, and more than equal must be unequal." He is still clinging to the notion that if Adam was created holy, holiness must have been an essential part of his very organization, and not, as it was, simply the holy state in which his moral powers were created. It seems to me that Wesley and Watson have made this as clear as the noonday sun, and it is astonishing that any can fail to see it. Besides, if holiness would have made Adam "crooked," then all holy beings—saints, angels, and even God himself—are in this sense crooked. I know he refers only to his moral organization; but if a holiness conferred upon man in his creation would render his organization crooked, then any other holiness must have the same effect on all beings possessing it.

Again he says: "The soul of man is not in a very important sense a creation; nor is it, like the body, a formation or relation. If a creation, then the Creator is certainly responsible for its success or failure." Whether we consider the soul a creation, or formation, or relation, or an emanation, it was certainly brought into existence somehow by God—it did not come by chance. He is as much the author of the existence of the soul as he is of the body and of the mind; and if we should hold him responsible for the success or failure of the first, we must of the others also. But, however produced, the Bible teaches that it began its career in a state of holiness.

Here is another passage: "If Adam was created holy, how could he sin? If the tree is holy, the fruit is holy." The good tree can produce only good fruit, because it does not possess intelligence and will; but man, possessing both, can do as he pleases, although created holy. So, now, the Christian of highest attainments can sin and fall, because he is free. Adam's being created holy no more made it necessary for him to continue holy than it is now necessary for the Christian to continue so.

Another: "God himself works under law, and there is not one holiness for God and another for man, who is the image of God." Granted. But are we to suppose there is no holiness belonging to the character of God apart from an exercise of his will in obedience to law? If it were possible to suppose that the existence of God had a beginning, must we suppose that there would be no holiness belonging to his nature until he should have time to develop it by repeatedly exercising his will in obedience to law? Such a supposition is not to be entertained for a moment. His entire nature—his every attribute—independently of any exercise of his will, would be already infinitely holy, already perfectly conformed to the great eternal principles of rectitude; and his will would simply act in accordance with the promptings of his infinite holiness and wisdom. So, I suppose, when God breathed into Adam's nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul, "that that soul was endowed with a holy disposition before there was time for any exercise of the will; but, from the first moment of his existence, his retaining that holiness depended entirely on his will.

The last remark I notice is: "If God could make a man holy, he could keep him from sin." Not so, unless he could make a moral agent without freedom of will. God, in creating man, could bestow whatever blessing upon him he pleased, but could not force him to keep it.

The Sabbath as Regards Missionary Anniversaries, Etc.

MR. EDITOR: The writer protests against the holding of missionary anniversaries on the Sabbath, either in the morning, the afternoon or at night, because he considers the exercises of such occasions unsuitable for assemblies of worshipers on the Sabbath day. The calling of the society "to order," the reading of reports, the taking up the collections, the noise, bustle, and sometimes laughter, attending the collection, and perhaps attending the delivery of some of the speeches, are not calculated to promote the piety of Christians, or to favorably impress persons who are not Christians. Anything ludicrous had better be excluded from the anniversary exercises, no matter when they are held, and especially is the ludicrous unbecoming on the Sabbath and in the house of God.

Some may attempt to justify the holding of the anniversary on the Sabbath by saying that the importance of the missionary enterprise renders it proper that the meeting should be held on that day. But the Bible does not teach us to do evil that good may come, or to sacrifice principle to expediency; and the writer would respectfully ask those who think it proper to hold the anniversary on Sunday to examine the ground which they occupy; to see if they are not in danger of falling into one of the wrongs above mentioned. The work of spreading the gospel is watched over by our Creator. He is not limited as to time or resources, and his people should be careful to avoid displeasing him by doing what may not be right in order to aid his cause.

There are other customs observed by some of our ministers which should be dispensed with, and one of these is the mode of taking up the collections ordered by the Annual Conference. It is not designed to discuss here the propriety of making these collections on the Sabbath, but the means resorted to by ministers in order to obtain a large amount. Take an instance of a collection conducted according to the objectionable plan. After the sermon the minister says to the congregation: "We have decided to take up, on this occasion, the collection for the Conference claimants. Will Bro. K. please stand near me and take the names of subscribers and the amounts subscribed?" Bro. K. takes his place and the minister asks: "Who will give us $20?" If any one responds the name is enrolled and the call is resumed: "Who else will give us $20?" When all the twenty-dollar subscriptions have been placed on the list the minister proceeds to call, in the same way, for ten-dollar and afterward for five-dollar subscriptions. After this the stewards are requested to hand around the baskets to receive smaller contributions. It does seem that this manner of taking up a collection is unsuited to the Sabbath service. Besides, it wearies the congregation, probably causes the people to think of the "hard times"—a subject which daily and nightly harasses them—may occasion harsh remarks about the collection or the minister, and, allowing that the sermon was good, the effects of the services are greatly impaired by the manner of taking up the collections. The writer has heard the above mode of obtaining subscriptions compared to an auction, and he considered the comparison an apt one. If collections are taken on Sunday, let them occupy little time, interfere as little as possible with the services, and be unattended by anything which would justify such a comparison as that above mentioned.

Meetings in the interest of the American Bible Society ought not to be held on Sunday. The remarks about missionary anniversaries and Conference collections are sufficiently applicable here to render additional remarks unnecessary.

Let attention be called to one other grievance, and that is the custom of some ministers of holding Church Conferences on the Sabbath. People need rest on the seventh day from business matters, whether they relate to professional or mercantile life, or to the church, and this rest is not afforded by the business proceedings of a session of the Church Conference. Furthermore, why not with as much propriety hold a business session of a Quarterly or an Annual Conference on Sunday as a session of the Church Conference? PROTESTANT.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Protestant is entitled to a hearing, and some of his strictures are just. Nevertheless, let us not be deterred from taking up collections on Sunday. Giving to God is as religious a thing as we can do. In almost every church and community there are some who are peculiarly sensitive about collections, but generally the outcry arises more from stinginess than piety.)

WHAT a person has experienced within cannot be argued out.

Boxing Children.

MR. EDITOR: We have noticed in newspapers and medical journals several articles on this subject, the authors treating it only in its physical bearings and results. It is said that the practice is to be condemned because it not unfrequently produces deafness by injuring the delicate organism of the ear. If such is liable to be its result, the practice should be avoided by all parents who would rear physically sound families. But we prefer to let anatomists discuss this phase of the subject, while we give attention to the moral tendencies of boxing, or, as it is familiarly called, slapping children. Having thought much on this subject, we ask leave to say a word upon it, hoping that, if we fail to show the error of their way to those who are established in the belief that a quick, sharp, unexpected slap on the ear or cheek is a sure method of driving satan out of the heart, we may at least help some young mother anxiously seeking guidance in training the little immortals committed to her keeping.

That the moral nature begins development as soon as the infant is born is a fact too little considered by mothers. It is taking moral impressions from the mother's looks, words and actions while she is wholly unconscious that she is doing more for it than furnishing the nourishment its body needs.

The little child soon learns to reason in some degree—to trace effects to their causes, and the being whose actions it first watches with desire to know what produces them is its mother. The child, met with an angry brow, an impatient word and a slap for some trifling offense, when an hour before it had committed the same without receiving even a rebuke, is indignant at the wrong; and, though it dare not speak, it has bitter thoughts of its mother, and she loses somewhat of the reverence with which it had regarded her. The child thinks: "Mother is angry; that is why she struck me; but if I strike the cat when I am tired and hungry she says I'm a bad girl. I don't think it's any worse for us children to get angry when we are tired, and strike cats and dogs when they do wrong, than it is for grown folks to treat children so. I wonder if God thinks it's worse?"

So far as we have observed, boxing children indicates more of unsubdued evil in the persons who do the boxing than in the children who are boxed. We have never known any who had learned to rule their own spirits who practiced it. It is the spontaneous expression of an impatient, overbearing, severe spirit. It is degrading to the child upon whom it is practiced, and disgraceful to those who practice it. Unless there be some loving, tender heart to whose sympathy the child thus treated can flee for comfort, the chances that its future will be good or happy are against it.

People who box children always do it from the moment's impulse, not from the conviction that the child has done a moral wrong that cannot be corrected by an appeal to its moral nature. They use brute force because it is easy to use, and affords a quick exit for the pent-up irritability of their unconquered tempers.

Let children be ruled by fear, and they may appear to the observer model children; but he who sees beneath the surface knows what a world of evil lies smoldering there, only waiting to find an opportunity to burst forth and scorch and torture not only their own lives, but also the lives of those who might have taught them to control themselves. Unfortunately, instead of this they have only chained for a time their evil natures, not even showing them by example what it is to have a heart and life disciplined aright.

Ah, how I pity the children who have learned to expect a slap for every offense! How degraded they feel! How strong the inclination to deceive grows in them, and what a life long struggle it will cost them to undo the evils of their early training!

Boxing children is nothing more nor less than the fighting of a weak child by a stronger, who knows he has power, and that the child he strikes has no power to return the blow. It is in no proper sense a means of correcting fault, but only a manifestation of anger or impatience backed by power.

PHILPATDA.

I PRETEND not to explain events, but I do see glorious issues of suffering, and these are enough. Once had I been called upon to create the earth, I should have done as the many would now. I should have laid it out in pleasure grounds, and given man Milton's occupation of tending flowers. But I am now satisfied with this wild earth, its awful mountains and depths, steeps and torrents. I am not sorry to learn that God's end is a virtue far higher than I should have prescribed.—Channing.

Obituaries.

MRS. MARY DURR was born in Copiah county, Miss., September 28, 1848. She was the only daughter of William and Mary Millsaps. She was educated at the State Female College, Memphis, Tenn., under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Collins. Her parents and grandparents were members of the Methodist Church. Her sins were pardoned and she received the witness of the Spirit, and joined the church of her parents at Pleasant Valley, at a meeting held by Bro. Lambuth, of precious memory. She was married to Dr. Durr February 18, 1868. Only a few years of wedded life were allotted them. The Lord saw fit to lay his afflicting hand upon her husband, and to remove him to the "better land." After his death she seemed to give herself more fully to the Lord than she ever had done before. Her object in life seemed to be entirely changed, and she only wanted to live to be useful. Although modest and unassuming, her influence was powerfully felt in the Sunday school and in the church. She was just opening into a noble Christian womanhood when consumption—the same disease which had taken her husband off—claimed her as his victim. As soon as her health began to fail, with her usual calmness and thoughtfulness she set herself to work to "put her house in order." Her trust was strong in the Lord. Not a murmur or complaint escaped her lips. She liked for her friends to pray and sing for her. Her favorite hymn commenced: "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord." She seemed to lay down her life, all her hopes and anxieties as a mother, cheerfully, submitting entirely to the will of the Lord. Such triumphs of faith are most glorious. "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Her suffering ended on the morning of April 4, 1875, at the residence of her brother, T. E. Millsaps. We can but imagine the scene of reunion with her sainted mother, father, brothers and husband as they gather at the "beautiful river."

W. WADSWORTH.

SAMPSON LOUIS LAMKIN was born in Harrisburg, Ga., November 27, 1802, and died in Holmesville, Pike county, Miss., January 31, 1875, aged about seventy-three years.

He was married to Miss Narcissa Sessions August 19, 1828; moved to Mississippi in 1844, and settled in Pike county. He brought up a family of thirteen children, all of whom lived to be grown. He had seven sons in the Confederate army at one time. Three were killed and four came home.

He joined the Methodist Church on probation, at a camp meeting in Dooley county, Ga., in 1828. He was converted in a class meeting in January, 1832, and was baptized in infancy by the Rev. Stieth Mead. Bro. Lamkin was a decided Christian gentleman, and when stirred up under revival influences was a man of great zeal and power in religious exercises, and was gifted in prayer and exhortation. He was put in trust of office, by both Church and State (never to be betrayed,) till the day of his death.

Bro. Howard, one of our preachers, was on his way to his new circuit, and dined with Bro. Lamkin and family. After dinner they had a pleasant religious talk, and he referred to his own personal experience and the future prospects of the church, remarking at the same time that, old as he was, he might live to see some man like Wesley or Whitefield rise up as a reformer in the Methodist Church. A few minutes afterward he accompanied Bro. Howard to the gate, giving the preacher a warm welcome to his house, as was his manner; and as they parted he turned to walk down the street, and fell dead instantly, without a groan or struggle. His sudden and peculiar death may have been in answer to his own prayers. However bright his prospects may have been beyond the grave, there was in his mind a dread of the hour of dying, of which he often spoke.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

JOHN F. TAGGART, son of David F. and Elizabeth Taggart, was born in Abbeville district, S. C., November 18, 1807. From South Carolina his parents moved to Illinois and remained one year, afterward returning to the old homestead, where John was born and lived until he was twenty-one, when they moved to Mississippi, where they remained only a short time, and moved to Pickens county, Ala., where he was married to Rebecca Neel, a truly good and pious woman, with whom he lived to raise twelve children, ten of whom are now living, and most of them members of the church. After the death of Rebecca Neel he was married to Frances M. Taylor, a true Christian who now lives, with her two orphan children, to mourn his death. Bro. Taggart was converted at the age of twenty-six, and joined the Methodist Church. In our intercourse with him, which was short, he was upright in his walk and conversation; he labored to educate his children, and to train them up in the right way.

He was a man of prayer. Collecting his family night and morning, he consecrated them to God, and invoked his blessings upon them. He was a kind and affectionate husband and father.

We did not converse with him about dying, for his death, which was sudden and unexpected, came without previous sickness. His wife stated to me that he had heart disease, and often spoke to her about dying; that he expected to die at any time, and was prepared to go when his Master saw fit to take him. On the morning of the sixth of May he got up feeling as well as usual, attended to his domestic duties, held family prayer, praying for all his children, most of whom had married and left the parental roof, ate his breakfast, and went out to feed his hogs, accompanied by his little son. While sitting on the pen, calling them, he fell to the ground. His little boy gave the alarm, but before his wife could reach him he breathed his last.

"Be ye therefore ready also, for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."—Luke xii, 40.

MRS. MARY COLLINS, wife of Sumner Collins, was born in Jasper county, Ga., on the first day of May, 1836. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church in the year 1858. In all the relationships of life she filled her part well. She was a dutiful child, a loving sister, a good neighbor and a faithful wife. As a Christian she feared God and kept his commandments. Her feet never strayed from the narrow way that leads to life. In the use of all the means of grace she was diligent. She loved the social meetings of her church, and filled her place regularly in the great congregation. She was the light of her home and the joy of her husband's heart. Her faith added an increased charm to all her natural endowments—rendered her more and more attractive to her friends and loved ones. She was suddenly attacked by pneumonia about the middle of January. At first her symptoms were not alarming, and no danger was apprehended. But in a few days her condition became alarming, and it was soon perceived that her end was nigh. As death drew near she felt fully prepared to depart and be with Christ. It was a source of much anxiety to her when she saw the grief of her husband and friends; but, bidding them meet her in heaven, and giving to each of them an affectionate farewell, on the morning of the twenty-seventh of January, 1875, she quietly fell asleep in Jesus, in the city of Montgomery, Ala. A. S. ANDREWS.

DIED, March 5, 1875, Mrs. MARY EMMA LEE, of Sabine parish, La., aged eighteen years.

Our beloved sister joined the church in September, 1872. She married her husband, I. E. Lee, January 22, 1874. Sister Lee was a daughter of the late lamented Thomas B. Connerly, who had brought his child up in the fear of the Lord; therefore she did not depart therefrom. Twelve months before her death she seemed to have a presentiment of the approaching dissolution, and was ready. Being in possession of a strong faith, she calmly approached the borders of the cold waters of the Jordan, and even when she had entered its cold stream she called her friends and bid them adieu. Her last words were to her husband, insisting that he should meet her in heaven. Thus she died in the triumphs of a living faith. She leaves a husband and one child (an infant) to mourn her loss.

J. M. F.

DIED, in Copiah county, Miss., May 1, 1875, Mrs. NANCY CARNES. She was born in the year 1793; was married to Ephraim Carnes November 18, 1820; joined the Methodist Church in the early part of her life—so far back in the past that none of her descendants know when she started to be a Christian. When this country was a wilderness she was here, a member of the Methodist Church, to encourage and support, by her presence and prayers, our early ministers. She was one of the links that bind us to the past generation. She has just dropped out, full of years, and is gathered to her fathers. She died fully resigned, waiting patiently for the call of the Master. A. B. NICHOLSON.

I AM cheered by thinking that this is not the only time for exertion. As rest and sleep fit us for the next day's labors, much more may a life of submission and trust and fidelity, under infirmity, be a preparation for a nobler sphere hereafter.—Channing.

PRIMROSE AND VIOLET.

Primrose and violet, down in the lane,
Trod by our Lord's upstrayed children of old,
I welcome you out of the earth again,
In your shaded purple and sky gold.

Only—if only the warm spring sun
Brought back the dead who died with the flowers!
Ye are so many, and she was but one,
Who faded forever from my earthly bowers.

Closed her blue eyes as the violets slept,
Sank with the primroses into the earth;
None could awaken her, loud though they wept;
She will not joy in the flowers' new birth.

Primrose and violet! one still in death
Those of your kindred she gave to me here;
Granting my prayer for her youthful faith,
And she had withered before they were sere.

Yet I must live, and must live for the right—
It is for her and to see her again;
And you—ye shall be where she lies this night,
And die on her dead heart, as I would fain.

Hebrew Ladies at their Toilet.

The first thing that would have struck us in examining the garderobe of a Hebrew lady would have been the quantity of dresses. In this age of simplicity such a thing would naturally astonish us. Hebrew women were, indeed, fond of dress, and the luxury among them manifested itself in the richness and variety of dresses; and the quantity of ornaments and the jewelry was soon carried to such an extent that it became necessary to protest against it. There is no doubt that, as the intercourse between the Jewish and other nations increased, the belles felt no longer satisfied with primitive simplicity. The fashions of the clever Egyptians, the elegant Phœnicians and the luxurious Persians were soon eagerly sought after and reproduced. Even patient Job got impatient at the dresses, and all of us have read that magnificent, bold denunciation of Isaiah, as with withering sarcasm he denounces the "women of the period" living for nothing else but dress and flirtation, and having but one desire—"to see and be seen."

Now look first at the undergarment—ketonet tunica. It was worn by men and women, but of course women had things made of the very best material. It was made of wool or linen; white or blue, now and then striped, and afterward—thanks to the Persians—of a silky material. It was worn on the naked body, and a person wearing it is often described as naked, which, in the language of the nineteenth century, means that she was en negligé. The Eastern dresses are all very far from being close fits, and the ketonet was at first a loose garment, without sleeves, reaching down to the knees. It is supposed that the poor wore no other dress except the ketonet.

The second article to be found in the garderobe of wealthy people was the sadiin, translated fine linen in our version of the third chapter of Isaiah. I suppose that it was worn over the ketonet.

Thirdly, some ladies wore a second undergarment a long, wide tunica, with or without arms, known among the Greeks and Romans, and wore also by the Phœnicians. It was made of costly material, and richly inwoven with flowers and figures. The part around the neck was covered with ornaments, the flowers were generally of the darkest purple, and the borders were trimmed with gold and brilliant colors. Next came the girdle to keep up the dress, so much thought of among all the nations of antiquity, as I need hardly remind the readers of Homer. It was made of different materials, according to the taste, or rather the purse, of the owner. The common girdles were of leather, and very narrow. Some were of silk or gold, and ornamented with silver buckles; they were worn round the loins; women wore them lower and more loosely than men.

The last piece of clothing I shall mention is the upper garment,—a long, wide mantle, with a train that would delight our Western ladies. It seems to have been originally a square piece of cloth, somewhat like a big shawl. At first it was made of camel's hair, afterward it was made of cotton. Those worn in the summer were of light material, like our muslin, while for those in use during the winter a thicker material was generally chosen. The simlah was useful and ornamental. It was often used as a carpet or as a covering during the night. Hence the Law of Moses, which regulated several things—for instance, that no mixture of cotton and wool should be used in the making of materials—commanded that if a man through poverty pledged his mantle it should be restored to him after sunset. The simlah was fastened with golden pins to the shoulders, whence it fell in graceful folds over the other garments. Some of the mantles must have been splendid. In the Book of Judges the then living girls are thus described by Deborah: "A prey of divers colors, a prey of divers colors of needlework." "Her clothing is silk and purple," says Lemuel.

Long hair was, of course, considered a great ornament; it is said of Shulamite: "Thy hair is as a flock of goats." Once upon a time it was the fashion to let it hang down and just put a ribbon through it, which is certainly the simplest and by far the prettiest way. Afterward, when people began to make themselves "beautiful forever," they plaited their hair, curled and twisted it in all possible shapes and directions, and poured pots of oil on it or powdered it with gold-dust. Sometimes hair was curled and made up into a gigantic wreath at the back of the head; at other times the hair was rolled in several large curls, which were left hanging on the back. Coquettish girls, or fascinating young widows, let a ringlet glide down gracefully across the forehead, so as to shade the eyebrows. But who can enumerate all the ways in which women try to do their hair? The Hebrew ladies copied other nations; Jezebel was an adept in dressing her hair; she dyed daily, and it was impossible to say in the morning what the color of her hair or her face would be in the evening. The fashionable Hebrew ladies did not dye their hair; they did it up neatly, but how is more than I can tell, for it is known that they had no combs. They painted their faces, as is the fashion of the nineteenth century; their eyebrows and their nails were most ornamental. Veils were considered of great importance; no respectable woman was without them. But women were not then as closely veiled as they are at present in the East. There were several kinds of veils. There was one like a light mantle, which was worn in the way our ladies wear a fichu, and, to mention only one other kind, there was a veil fixed to the covering of the head, which fell on to the brow and then was turned backward; while another veil fixed under the eyes was let down to cover the breast.

The most splendid article of clothing was the turban, for those who could afford it. The poor people had to be satisfied with winding a piece of cloth round their head and fixing it as well as they could. The turbans were of various colors, and wound in different ways; some of them were like a high tower.

Shoes and stockings were unknown, but soles of leather were fastened with two latchets. The ladies, who carried luxury into every department, and who are supposed, even in the present day, to be far from indifferent to a nice, neat foot, or to elegant slippers, had their shoes, or rather sandals, and their latchets made of beautifully colored leather; dark blue, violet and purple were favorite colors. Solomon admired Shulamite's shoes very much, and also the feet which wore them, for he says: "How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter!" Round the ankles bracelets of gold or dainty silver chains and rings, with tiny silver bells, were worn.

Hair nets and head-bands were in great request. The latter were made of gold or silver, and worn under the net, extending from one ear to the other. Ear rings were much thought of; we are told of some that weighed a thousand and seven hundred shekels of gold, and that were so large that a man could easily put his hand through them. Some of the women wore several rings with little bells attached to them. They were generally made of horn or of silver. But the most popular ring was the nose-ring. The left nostril was pierced for the purpose, and a ring made of ivory or of metal was put through it. To our Western taste this practice seems revolting and barbarous, but why it should be more so than the piercing of the ears I am at a loss to conceive.

Bracelets were generally worn on the right arm and some of them were exceedingly large, so that they reached up to the elbow. Rings on the fingers were worn; chains of gold, or strings of pearls with little silver bells or small tinkling bells, were worn around the neck. "Thy cheeks," said Solomon, who knew more about women than most of us do, "are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold." It was customary to attach ornaments to these chains, either with no meaning, as the crosses which our ladies wear, or to serve as amulets; such were round tipes like the moon, small scent bottles, ornaments in the shape of serpents, and little gold or silver plates on which were written words supposed to be possessed of magical power.—A. J. Schwartz, in S. Paul's Magazine.

Literary Labor.

A great deal of brilliant work has been done at a dash, and is still done. Byron wrote "The Corsair" in ten days, at the rate of two hundred lines a day, and sent it to press as it was written, published it with hardly a correction. Lope de Vega wrote three hundred dramas for the stage in one hundred days, upon the principle upon which an athlete now and then walks one hundred miles in one hundred hours; and it has been reckoned that the average amount of his work was nine hundred lines a day. Voltaire wrote "Zaire" in three weeks, and "Olympie" in six days; Dryden wrote his "Ode to St. Cecilia" at a sitting. The finest of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's poems, "The Lady Geraldine's Courtship," was the work of twelve hours. It was written to complete the original two volumes of her poetry, and to send out with her proofs to America. But as a rule the best work is not to be done at a dash in this style. "What do you think of 'Olympie?'" Voltaire asked one of his friends, after that work was published; "I wrote it in six days." "You should not have rested on the seventh day," was the answer, and the answer was wise as well as witty.

Shakespeare was not one of those slapdash workers; and Shakespeare, with his thirty four plays, has conquered the world. Dickens, when he intended to write a Christmas story, shut himself up for six weeks, lived the life of a hermit, and came out looking as haggard as a murderer. Tom Moore, with his effervescence and sparkle, thought it quick work if he added seventy lines to "Lalla Rookh" in a week, although living out of the world in his writing box in the Peak. Planche produced his burlesques at an equally slow rate, thinking ten or a dozen lines a day good work. The author of "Paste" and "School" was one of the slowest of workmen. Even Albany Fonblanque often wrote articles in the Examiner six times over before he thought them fit to go to press, and sometimes ten times over. Hepworth Dixon, it is said, wrote his "Two Queens" eight times. That exquisite trifle of Kinglake's "Eothen," was rewritten five or six times, and kept in his desk almost as long as Wordsworth kept "The White Doe of Rylstone," and kept, like that, to be taken out for revision and correction almost every day. And that is the way in which good, honest work—work that is to the soul to-morrow and the day after to-morrow—must be written. Scotts and Scribes only turn up once in a century.—Gentleman's Magazine.

* Isaiah narrates twenty-one articles of dress.

Fruit After Many Days.

About forty years ago a young minister, on a mission to a distant village from the town in which he resided, was staying for a night at a gentleman's house. A little girl, about four years of age, was very much interested in this minister, and began to chat and play with him. By and by the little girl's mamma told her that it was time for her to go to bed, and so she would ring for the nurse.

In the meantime the minister took the little girl upon his knee, and began to talk to her in a very engaging manner about Jesus.

"Now, my dear," he said, "I'm going to tell you one thing which I hope you will never forget. Will you remember what I am going to say?"

She looked with her bright, clear eyes into his face and said: "Oh, yes; what is it?"

Then, putting his hands gently on her head, he slowly said: "My dear, if you don't love Jesus you never can be happy. Now I will tell you that once more." He repeated the words: "My dear, if you don't love Jesus you never can be happy." And again he asked: "Will you remember that?"

The child said: "Yes."

About thirty years after that visit the minister was called to the same village. When they were seated at the breakfast-table the lady of the house, whose husband and children were also at the table, all at once looked very earnestly at him, and inquired whether he had ever been there before. He could not remember. She then mentioned one or two things, which brought the circumstance to his mind that he was in that village at the beginning of his ministry. Presently he remembered the house in which he was a guest for one night. The lady reminded him how he spoke those impressive words of counsel to a little girl: "If you don't love Jesus you never can be happy." He saw the tears in her eyes. She said: "I was that little girl. Often your words came to my memory, and re-echoed in my mind, when I was giddy and thoughtless: 'If you don't love Jesus you never can be happy.' And these were the means of bringing me, years ago, to love my Savior, since which time I have indeed been happy."

Child Piety.

I pity those who fail to discover piety in a child because it happens to climb a gate or jump over a post. There may be as much religion in a child's games as in a man's business. The body is redeemed as well as the soul; and every manly exercise is a good work—is worship to the Christian; and so may play be to the Christian child. Yet many of these little ones are frowned back because no one perceives the first pulsation of the divine life. A young Christian may live, though he cannot tell the time when he passed from death into life. Existence is the best proof of being. On all tests, the chronological is the worst. But, also, is a contrast one. Christianity is a thing of the heart, not alone of the head. Too many have regarded correctness of creed as the test. It is not what is believed, but the person on whom faith rests, Christ is the life. If there be that love to Christ, do not be afraid, even if there is but little knowledge. They may have but crude notions of morality. Occasional disobedience does not always argue the want of filial love. How often those who are older have to repent! There is much for grace to do for us all. Being satisfied of the conversion of the children, what shall we do with them?

1. Let them be admitted to the church as soon as they manifest the signs of having been the recipients of regenerating grace. But remember the church is a family. Treat the child members in the church as in your homes. Have, if you will, a limit of age before you allow them to interfere in business matters.

2. Take care of them. Have pastor's classes of young converts. Put them in care of deaconesses or other experienced persons, who know how to love and sympathize with the young.—London S. S. Teacher.

A GREAT BLESSING.—Oh, what a blessing is a merry, cheerful woman in a household! One whose spirits are not affected by wet days or little disappointments, or whose milk of human kindness does not sour in the sunshine of prosperity. Such a woman in the darkest hours brightens the house like a little piece of sunshiny weather. The magnetism of her smile, the electrical brightness of her looks and movements infect every one. The children go to school with a sense of something great to be achieved; her husband goes into the world in a conqueror's spirit. No matter how people worry and annoy him all day, far off her presence shines, and he whispers to himself: "At home I shall find rest." So day by day she literally renews his strength and energy, and if you know a man with a beaming face, a kind heart and a prosperous business, in nine cases out of ten you will find he has a wife of this kind; for nothing is more certain than that the man who is married must ask his wife for permission to be happy and wealthy. Occident.

WASHINGTON, says the Episcopal Methodist, presents some rather remarkable phases of social life. There is at this time in that city a granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson, who, with her young son, is pleading for an appointment for one or the other as a means of support. The daughter of ex Secretary of the Treasury Robert J. Walker and the daughters of Chief Justice Taney are doing copying as a means of livelihood, and there are the grandchildren of ex-presidents, generals, and hundreds of other distinguished people, pleading for labor, at even the smallest remuneration, so that they may be able to live.

SIXTEEN thousand seven hundred Catholics in the old province of Prussia have turned Protestants the past year.

Religious Intelligence.

THE religious revival at Lexington, Ky., resulted in the accession of one hundred and seventy persons to the various churches of that city.

THE Jesuits are making great efforts to found new establishments, schools and churches. At Beyrout alone no less than twenty sites are about to be built upon.

THE Catholic Review, of New York, is shocked at the audacity of the municipal authorities of Rome for sending a water tax bill to the Pope, accompanied with a hint that unless it was paid the supply of water would be shut off.

IN order to vitiate, as far as possible, the consequences of the civil marriage law, the Roman Catholic clergy of Bavaria exhort the parents of their flock to give a dower to their daughter on her marriage only when the ceremony is afterward repeated before the priest.

A GENERAL revival among the Protestant churches of France is a thing hitherto almost unknown. There seem now indications of such an awakening, and united services have been held in Paris, Nimes and other places, attended by the clergy of various bodies and by large congregations.

THE Australasian Wesleyan Missionary Society are shortly to commence a mission in New Britain and New Ireland, large islands near New Guinea, and until recently supposed to be part of New Guinea itself. There is a large population, and they have never been visited by a missionary.

THE Roman Catholic Church has a mission of over fifty priests in Japan, also a mission in the center of the capital, which they owe to the power of France. Their work at present seems to be among their old convents. They have a school of about fifty pupils preparing for the priesthood.

BOHEMIA.—Previous to 1868 there were forty-nine Protestant congregations in Bohemia. Since that time their number has been considerably increased in consequence of the introduction of more tolerant laws. There are seventy-two of them now, four new churches having been opened since New Year.

MR. FOSTER NEWTON, of London, England, who died in January, left several legacies to Wesleyan institutions, and to the president of the Wesleyan Conference five hundred books on theology and divinity, to be selected by him out of his library to aid in forming a local preachers' library for the two London districts.

THERE are four hundred religious journals in the United States. The Methodists have forty-seven, the largest number; then come the Catholics, who number forty one; the Baptists, thirty five; the Presbyterians, twenty nine; the Episcopalians, twenty one; Lutherans, fourteen; German Reformed, fourteen; Jewtone; and Congregationalists, eight.

THE Levant Herald announces a large accession to the Protestant community in Damascus, Syria, from the Greek Church. The Greek bishop had appropriated to his own use gifts to church funds, and refused to account for more than £3000. As a means of retaliation, or to bring him to terms, a portion of his flock turned Protestants. Once brought into contact with evangelical teaching, they are now willing to abandon all claims against their former bishop, and to content themselves with the greater riches they have found in the gospel.

A CABLE DISPATCH announces the death of Henry George Augustus Ewald, the celebrated German Oriental and philological scholar, at seventy-two years of age. At the age of twenty he became a professor in the College of Wolfenbuttel, in 1831 professor of philosophy, and afterward of Oriental languages and theology in Gottingen; in 1838 he accepted the chair of theology in the University of Tubingen. About 1848 he began to publish his writings, since which his contributions to literature have been voluminous and exceedingly valuable.

THE Earl of Shaftsbury, at the anniversary of a Bible Christian Sunday school, London, England, delivered an address, in which he argued that if ever England was to be permeated with the knowledge of the word of God he thought such a result must come about through the instrumentality of Sunday school teaching. In view of eliminating the religious element from the day school system, he thought he could foresee the time when the Sunday schools of England would be the only depository of the true knowledge and practice of the word of God. He urged the need of teachers being better qualified, and complimented the American system of Sunday school management.

THE Episcopal Recorder says that the Reformed Episcopal Church finds its first foothold in the diocese of Ohio at Put-In Bay. Twelve years ago a regular Episcopal parish was organized here, but with the germs of the new body in its constitution. From the outset it was understood to be fundamental to its existence that its pulpit should be open to all ministers, of Christ, irrespective of their church name. This was at a time when such Christian courtesy was not inconsistent with Episcopal canon law. But more recent legislation put an end to this, and the parish dissolved its connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and under the leadership of its pastor, S. S. Weldon, formed itself into an independent body of the Congregational order, using in its worship the liturgy of the old church, revised. Mr. Weldon failed in health and had to retire. Some time afterward the Reformed Episcopal Church came into being; the Rev. William Bower, of that body, was invited to take charge and began his ministry on Easter Sunday. At the parish meeting the next day (Easter Monday) it was resolved unanimously that the parish cast its lot with the new body, and that hereafter it be known as the Reformed Episcopal Church of Put-In Bay.

Our Young People.

LITTLE WHIMPY.

Whimpy little Whimpy,
Cried so more one day
His grandma couldn't stand it,
And his mother ran away.
His sister tore and flew away,
His father went to town,
And cook flew into the pantry
To her Sunday kitchen gown.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
Stood out on the stair
And cried up at the crickens
And the ducks began to run;
Old Towser in his kennel
Growled in an angry tone,
Then burst his collar and Whimpy
Was left there all alone.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
Cried and cried and cried;
Soon the sunlight vanished,
Flowers began to hide;
Birds stop sat to sing,
Frogs began to croak,
Darkness came, and Whimpy
Found crying was no joke.

Whimpy, little Whimpy,
Never heeded the day
When grandma couldn't stand it,
And his mother ran away.
He was waiting by the window
When they all came home to tea,
And a bladder has that Whimpy
You never need hope to see.

A Storm at Sea.

THE RESCUE.

"Mother, you will let me go?"

A terrible storm is sweeping along the wild coast of north Devonshire. The Dymmouth lifeboat is prepared to make its way to a foreign vessel which, at some short distance from the land, is showing signs of dire distress. The lifeboat crew is complete, with the exception of one man. Young Will Carew, a Dymmouth usher lad and an expert sailor, is offering to fill the vacant place. At first he bends down gently to a woman who stands beside him on the dreary shore, and it is his clear, brave voice that we hear above the raging of the storm:

"Mother, you will let me go?"

The mother has been a widow only six short months. Her husband was a fisherman; he put out one bright day last spring, for the last time, in a fishing-boat, upon a delusively calm sea. A sudden squall came on; broken fragments of the boat were seen next morning on the beach, but the fisherman returned no more to home and love. And now the son asks permission to brave the horrors of the sea which his father found so pitiless.

A fierce, passionate refusal rises to the woman's lips. But her sad eyes move slowly toward the distressed vessel; she thinks of the many loved lives in jeopardy within it, thinks, with a sudden pang of agonized pity, of many distant, dear homes in peril of bereavement; she turns to the boy, and her voice is calm and courageous as his own:

"Go, my son. And may God almighty go with you and bring you safe back to your mother's heart."

Hurriedly she leaves the beach, hurriedly seeks her desolate home, and alone she wrestles with the pain of her old sorrow and her new fear.

Morning dawns again. The storm has spent itself. Sullenly the waves are tossing their haughty heads, but the sea's worst fury is over at last. A gallant vessel has gone down upon the waters, but the Dymmouth lifeboat has nobly fulfilled its noble task, and all hands on board the vessel have been saved.

Why does young Will Carew linger in hesitation outside his mother's door? Bravest of the brave he has shown himself throughout the night. Why does he shrink from the proud welcome that awaits him from the heart nearest to his own?

Beside him stands a tall, worn man—a man whom he has rescued from a watery grave—a man whose eyes, full of tenderness never leave his own. Around the two throng Dymmouth villagers; many hands are thrust toward the man in happy recognition.

"Who will dare to tell her?" So speaks a voice well-nigh choked with emotion.

"I will." And Will Carew makes his way through the awe struck crowd. Another moment and he is in his mother's arms. He feels and knows for the first time the whole depth of that wondrous maternal love which Love Omnipotent has chosen as its best earthly token.

"Mother, listen. I have a tale for your ears. May God teach me how to tell it right. One of the men saved last night was a Dymmouth fisherman." The boy's voice is soft and grave, but it is evident that he steadies it only with a strong effort.

"A fearful storm had overtaken him upon the sea, one day not many months ago. He was observed and saved by a foreign vessel. The vessel was outward bound. Away from home, from wife, from kindred, the man was forced to sail; and by wife and kindred he was mourned as dead. He arrived at the vessel's destined port, only to set sail again with the first ship bound for England. Last night he found himself within sight of home; but a wild storm was raging on land and sea, and once more the man stood face to face with a terrible death. Help came in his need—help God sent, God directed. And—"

The boy breaks down now. On his knees, by his mother's feet, he clasps her hands convulsively in his, and his voice comes only through his thick sobs:

"Mother, darling, try to hear the happy truth. When your brave heart—a heart which, in the midst of its own sorrow, could feel for the sorrow of others—sent me forth last night to the succor of the distressed you knew not—how should you know?—that you sent me to the rescue of my dear father's life. God gave him to me, God has given him, mother, back to our grateful love."

Not another word is spoken. Locked in each other's arms, mother and son pour out their hearts in a flood of unspeakably happy tears.

A step is heard; the rescued man stands by his own fireside, remembering, with deep emotion, that his place there has been won for him by the skill and courage of his son.

With a cry of wild joy the mother rushes forward, and her head finds its long-lost place upon her husband's breast.

Ah! Love, supreme, unutterable Strange indeed are the paths through which thy divine wisdom leads thy children to gain happiness! In mute reverence we bow before the mighty tenderness which crowns and blesses earthly love.—Olive Leaf.

A LESSON FOR YOUNG MEN.—On passing through one of the wards of the —— prison I accosted an elderly looking convict. He held down his head, as though ashamed to look me in the face. On handing him a tract he said: "I knew your voice as soon as I heard you, sir; I have heard you before to-day, sir."

After a few words of explanation I found that we had been at one time members of the same congregation, and sat under the same faithful ministry. I anxiously inquired how it was that he had fallen so low as to become an inmate of a prison.

"A glass of ale, sir, was my ruin," he replied.

"How could that be?" I asked.

"I was at one period of my life, sir, very intemperate, but was hopefully led to give up drink entirely, although I did not sign any pledge, which I now lament. I became a regular attendant at the place of worship, and joined the congregation. I went on very happily for some years, until one evening I was returning from ——, when I met with some friends from Hull. They prevailed on me to go to the jubilee house to have but 'one glass.' Conscience reproved me, but, having entered upon the enchanted ground, I was readily induced to take more liquor, until I became overcome by it. The next morning I was ashamed to show myself, and left —— for Leeds.

"My old appetite for drink had been rekindled; I became reckless, and joined a set of counterfeit coiners. We were discovered, convicted, and now I am to be transported. O that I had never touched that one glass."—Band of Hope Review.

ASTHE TWIG IS BENT THE TREE'S INCLINED.—Ali Schind, one of the Rajahs of India, was noted for the uprightness of his dealings, and for his nice sense of honor even toward the lowest of his subjects. One day while out hunting with his courtiers he became hungry, and ordered some of the game they had taken to be dressed for an immediate repast. This requirement had been anticipated by his attendants, and they had brought with them bread, sauces, plates, and all they needed—all except salt, which had been forgotten. There was, however, a village near by, and a boy was hastily dispatched to procure some. The Rajah, hearing the order given, called after the lad to inquire whether he had taken money to pay for the salt. At this his attendants expressed some surprise, wondering that so great a man should trouble himself about such trifles, and adding that those who had the happiness of living under his dominion had no right to murmur if he should claim at their hands gifts of much greater value than a handful of salt. "Justice," replied the Rajah, "is of as much import ance in little as in great matters; and the fact of my conferring benefits on my subjects at one time gives me no right to oppress them in the smallest particular at another. All the wrongs and oppressions under which mankind groan began in little things, and if we would prevent great sins or great calamities we must strive against the beginnings of evil." Let our young readers mark this, and if they desire to become good and great men let them in childhood form habits of integrity, virtue and piety.—Children's Friend.

PAID HIS DEBT. One day a little son of a well-known bank officer in Wall Street, New York, lost his purse while coming from Central Park, and a stranger, seeing his discomfort, paid his railroad fare, three cents. The boy, thanking him, said: "If you will tell me your name, sir, I will bring it to you to-morrow."

"O no," said the gentleman, "never mind about it."

The boy persisted, saying that his father never allowed him to run in debt.

"I will not give you my name," replied the gentleman, "but I live at No. ——, on —— street." The next morning the door bell rang at that house, and our little hero told the amused servant maid his errand.

"Which of the gentlemen is it?" said she; "there are several in the family."

The boy twisted on his heel, and, after a moment's thought, said: "Have you a photograph-book in this house?"

She brought it, and after a moment's thought he said, pointing to one: "That's my man. Please give him three cents, and tell him the boy who borrowed it in the cars yesterday left it to pay his debt."—Youth's Companion.

MAMMA'S HAND AND JESUS' HAND.—A dear little child of three years of age lay dying. Father, mother, physician, friends, had done all in their power to stay the hand of death, but in vain.

The mother bent over him in speechless agony. How could she give him up—her beautiful boy, her darling, her treasure? How lonely the house would be without the little prattler!

But love could not keep him, and the last moments of life were ebbing away. All were watching, in almost breathless suspense, for the silent messenger.

Suddenly the dear child gazes around him, places one little hand in his mother's, and stretches the other one out as if clasping another. His lips move, and he utters the precious words he utters:

"One hand in mamma's and one in Jesus'."

And thus, protected with [illegible] of his two best friends, he takes the short step from one to the other.

"WHAT'S the use, in these days of trying to be honest?" exclaimed a grumbler. "O you ought to try it once and see," replied one of his companions.

Christ Over Against the Treasury.

Those chests in the temple, with their trumpet-shaped openings, were suggestive to the throngs coming and going. To the Jewish worshipers they were not offensive, for it was a part of their religion to give. The offering of sacrifices, the prayers of the devout, and all sacred services might be going on near by, but the rattle of coin as it fell wrought no discord. It was in keeping with God's house, although that house was to be a house of prayer for all nations. Christ did overthrow the tables of the money changers and drive out those who converted the holy place into a mart for buying, selling and getting gain, but he looks with complacency upon this arrangement for the support of religion.

He is there over against the treasury, and as he rests from his recent conflict with the Scribes and Pharisees there is something tranquilizing in the scene before him. Intent as he might be on the spiritual character and interests of the kingdom of God, the treasury and its contributors are worthy of his careful notice. His eye is upon those who come with their offerings, and he counts the pieces, and accurately estimates the character of the givers. It was sheer and outright giving—the money was cast into the treasury. Nothing came back in the shape of prizes, confections or spectacular entertainments. The money went into the chests, out of sight, and that was the end of it. It was for God and his temple, a gift out and out, with no discount taken off in the shape of fun and refreshments.

The poor widow is the central figure in the scene. The poorest of the poor, bereft and desolate, she throws in her two mites. It was but a farthing, but it was all her living. Many that were rich cast in much, but it was of their abundance. There might have been some conscience in their act, but there was no self-denial. It was less than convenient, costing no effort, and involving no loss of personal comfort. It did not even remotely touch their costly attire nor trench upon the delicacies of their tables. Their sumptuously furnished homes lost nothing of their splendor. They cast in much, but it was little for them. The only generous giver there was, the one who gave a farthing. In her it seemed a reckless act, to be condemned rather than commended.

To have given nothing, when there were so many rich people able to meet the entire demand, would have been a plausible view of her duty. She should at any rate have kept half, dividing what she had equally between the Lord and herself. This would have more than satisfied the piety of most people. There is an utter abandon in this giving of all—a love and faith that is as unaccountable to us as it was surprising to the Savior. So striking was this instance of consecration that the Master specially calls his disciples to contemplate it. It was a green spot in that arid waste of hypocrisy, ostentation and covetousness. In an atmosphere of greed, self-righteousness and malignant hatred of the truth, this was a relief and an object to dwell upon with peculiar pleasure and satisfaction.

Let us not mistake the lesson. It is the duty and the privilege of the poor to give. It is the privilege of the rich to give much, to build churches, endow colleges and establish asylums, but the poor may give, and even exceed in their giving, though it be absolutely little. The farthing, from those able to give dollars and thousands of dollars, would be an insult to God, while it is commended in those who can do no more. A missionary hen may be much for a little child, while an elephant or a herd of cattle would be a meager offering for many well-to-do people. It was the farthing of the poor widow that Christ dwells upon with so much approval. It was an expression of love and devotion in her, and a blessing to herself. The temple was not built by the mites of the poor, nor do we suppose they went very far toward maintaining the services and supporting the institutions of religion. They helped, no doubt; but then, as now, the contributions of the more wealthy were the chief dependence. The world can never be educated and saved by widows' mites and farthing donations. God expects the Vanderbilts, Drews, Riches, Cornells, and men of large means everywhere, to consecrate their wealth to Christian enterprises.

But, while this is so, it is the duty of the poor to give something. If the cause of Christ could do without their mites they cannot afford to withhold them. The grace that is in them will seek this manifestation, and will be increased and strengthened by it. That poor widow might have truly said to herself: "These mites are much to me, they can be comparatively nothing in the great treasure, and the rich can easily pay it all." But this would never have satisfied her love, nor would her personal obligation have been met. There was a blessing in the duty. She performed it, and while she cast in all that she had she went away rich and content. It is not unusual to encourage small donations by arguing the fact that a dime will pay for a Testament, that fifty cents will give a Bible to some poor heathen, and that a nickel will buy one brick for the church wall. This is well enough, but we imagine the poor widow thought very little about the purchasing power of her farthing. She gave it to God in a way that was customary and open to her. It might go into the oil of the sanctuary, help to pay for the morning and evening sacrifices, or contribute to the adornment and glory of the vestments of the high priest. She probably thought nothing of these things. Christ might have told her that the hierarchy was corrupt and about to vanish, and that her little store was as good as thrown away. It is the giving—the principle of it—that he scrutinizes and commends. Whatever became of the money, she did her duty and got her reward.

Christ is still over against the treasury. If he is present as an interested spectator anywhere it is here. He beholds the givers and weighs them in his balances. His eye is upon the rich and upon the poor. To him character is revealed by what men put into his chests. It is possible to deceive human judgment, and to make a show of piety where there is really no deep love. "The Lord shall judge his people." Christ is sitting in judgment on our collections. No man puts his hand into his pocket for Christ unnoticed by the Lord himself. He beholds how the people cast money into his treasury, what proportion it bears to what they have, the motive and the sacrifice in the act. The responsibility is not relative as to what others do, but personal and absolute. The penuriousness of the rich does not excuse the poor, nor does the unfaithfulness of one release another. The poor widow may have gone too far, but Christ commends her devotion. She will, we fear, rise up in the judgment and condemn many, both rich and poor, of this generation.

What is a Bishop?

A layman of Natchez, Miss., sends us a communication under this heading. We give the most of it, as follows:

I and a number of other people are very anxious to know what a Methodist Bishop looks like. A Roman Catholic Bishop resides here, and every year an Episcopal Bishop comes; but a Methodist Bishop is an unusual sight. Indeed an intelligent young lady recently asserted that the Methodists had no Bishop; at least, she added, none ever come to Natchez. The only reminders that some of our people have of the fact that there are Methodist Bishops are the assessments and collection for their support.

But let us be as serious as the subject we are considering. Think of it! For more than seven years not a Bishop of our church has visited Natchez! For more than twenty years there have been only three episcopal visitations to what was once the most important, and is now one of the most important, stations in Mississippi! Two, if not the three, of those visits were in the discharge of the office of president of the Conference. Is it any wonder that "Natchez station" is not more thriving? Is it to be wondered at that our membership is not as large or as influential as of yore? No! And the Bishops must share the blame. If one of them had accepted the invitation, which was extended to several, and attended our District Conference, preaching such sermons as they can preach, the effect would have been great and lasting. But none came. Will one of them ever come again? We feel the indifference with which we are treated.

This is the substance of the complaints which are made by many in different sections. If our friends will reflect a little they will see that it is simply impossible for the Bishops to visit all of even the more important pastoral charges except at considerable intervals. There are thirty-seven Annual Conferences, extending from Illinois to Mexico, and from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific. We have eight Bishops, two of them aged and infirm. In the distribution of their labors we have no doubt they have regard to the general welfare, and aim to expend their time and strength where most needed. Some places may be unintentionally overlooked in the plans of annual visitation, but representations made directly to the Bishops will always be gladly received and allowed their due weight.

The diocese of a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church is a small affair compared with the episcopal districts of our Bishops. The former embraces a single State, and sometimes less, containing few pastoral charges compared with ours in the same territory, while an episcopal district with us embraces several States, and often four, five and six Annual Conferences. The Anglican and Roman answer to our correspondent's inquiry would reveal a radical difference in their views and ours concerning the nature of the episcopacy. With them Bishops are successors of the apostles, and there can be no church without them. For the purpose of confirmation the Protestant Episcopal Bishop is required to visit each pastoral charge annually. None but he can receive candidates into the communion of the church. His hands must be laid upon them in order that they may receive the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed as members of the one only apostolic and true church. With us the episcopacy is an office of expediency, both scriptural and useful, but not essential to the existence and life of the church. The pastor receives members, and is competent to perform every office needed for the discipline and welfare of the congregation. Our Bishops are felt in the appointment of the pastors, and their acquaintance with the work may be tolerably accurate without a personal visitation.

We concede that they should travel as much as possible and preach, and by personal observation inform themselves concerning the character and requirements of the churches, but the reasons are very different from those which exist in the systems to which our lay friend refers. The work of our Bishops is connectional—they are to preside over the Annual Conferences, ordain the preachers and make the appointments, and, besides these imperative duties, they are to attend District Conferences, and travel during the year, as far as practicable, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church.

All this they are doing as best they may, and, as we believe, impartially, and without regard to their own comfort or convenience. To meet the demands which some would make upon them we should need at least twenty instead of eight Bishops. This would entail an expense which we fear would not be met, even if there were no other objections to such an enlargement of our episcopal force. It may be that the distribution of episcopal service is not made with sufficient system, and with the definite purpose of teaching every point within a reasonable period. It is possible that the Bishops might so arrange and systematize their labors as to meet the wishes of the people better than they do, but we suppose they have the whole field in view, and that their plans are carefully and wisely made. They are certainly very busy, rarely at home, and worked up to the full measure of their strength.

We are glad that the people are always anxious to see them, and that every church counts it a great privilege to enjoy their presence and ministry. We must, however, be considerate, remember the vastness of the territory, the manifold labors and cares, and the limited number of our Bishops. A great many circuits and stations are doubtless in the same category as Natchez. Many are much worse off, having never seen a Bishop at all. To have a Bishop among them once in seven years is doing pretty well, all things considered. We give the strictures of our correspondent, as he has a right to be heard, while we do not generally sympathize with the clamors for more episcopal service, nor admit the justice of the complaints which frequently come to our knowledge.

IN BOTH Presbyterian Assemblies—the North at Cleveland, the South at St. Louis—the fraternal union matter has come and been disposed of as was generally anticipated. By a very large majority, almost unanimously, the Northern branch resolved not to appoint another committee of conference at present, but it clothed its resolution in words that sound very much like an offer of the olive branch. Its words are:

"At the same time the Assembly avails itself of this opportunity to affirm unequivocally its confidence in the integrity and Christian character of our brethren of the Southern Church, and to declare that all acts and deliverances of the Northern Assemblies of which they complain are wholly null and void, and of no binding efficacy as judgments of the church we represent, or as rules of proceedings for the presbyteries and church sessions; and that in so far as they or any of them can be supposed to impeach any injurious imputations on the present character and standing of the churches and members of the Southern Assembly as Christians and Presbyterians, such an application of them would be unjust to them, and would be disapproved and regretted by us.

"And, further, we reaffirm explicitly, in harmony with the repeated and emphatic deliverances of former Assemblies, our hearty willingness and our earnest and sincere desire for the re-establishment of fraternal relations between the two bodies on terms and conditions which shall be mutually honorable, and in the spirit of Christian hearty forbearance and brotherly love; and that we await in charity and hope the early coming of the day when we shall again mingle with our brethren of the Southern Church in Christian fellowship and co-operation."

The Southern branch confirms the action of its committee at Baltimore. So far as we gather from telegraphic dispatches, no other very important matters have been reached in either Assembly, though the St. Louis body has had an unusually exciting local case before it—Dr. Wilson's refractory conduct toward the Louisville Presbytery. At Cleveland Rev. Dr. Morris, of Lane Seminary, presides; at St. Louis, Rev. Dr. Hoge, of Richmond.—Christian Union.

REVIVAL WORK IN MEMPHIS.—We are satisfied that the religious interest felt in the meetings held at the Exposition building in this city is increasing from day to day. Already a goodly number of persons have professed faith in Christ, and many more are inquiring the way of life and salvation. Multitudes wait upon the word preached by Mr. Whittle, whose labors are earnestly seconded, from time to time, at the meetings, by the city pastors and zealous laymen. The singing has been delightful even in the absence of Mr. Bliss. This gentleman, whose songs, as rendered by himself, have attracted much attention, was expected on Wednesday last, to resume his labors in connection with Mr. Whittle. We bid them God speed, though we, with many others, cannot accept as truth some of the doctrines which they teach the people in sermon and in song; and special instruction on certain points by pastors will be much needed upon the departure of the evangelists. Meanwhile let all co-operate with them. They preach Christ and faith in Christ—they preach the gospel in its leading features, and men are saved by their ministry, the Holy Spirit attending the word spoken by them. We pray that the salvation which is preached may be experienced by a multitude of people during this day of God's visitation.—Western Methodist, June 5.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—The third General Conference of the Methodist Church met in Princeton, Ill., May 19. John Burns, of Cambridge, O., was elected president, and H. B. McElroy, of Adrian, Mich., and A. H. Bassett, of Springboro, O., were elected secretaries. Among the special committees appointed was one composed of three ministers and three laymen to consider and report upon the question of the ordination of women in the Methodist Church, and the authorization of that ordination in the word of God and in our Book of Discipline. Another committee was appointed to report a plan for a board of church extension. The question of a change of denominational name was referred to a committee, on domestic union. All the General Conference editors and agents not present as delegates were constituted official members of the General Conference.

ON Thursday afternoon, May 20, Rev. Erwin House, A. M., who for about twenty seven years past has been assistant editor of the Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati, and who on the day in question was at work in the editorial rooms, sank to the floor and died instantly of angina pectoris.

A Big Building Not a University.

A very severe criticism of the Syracuse University, says the Methodist, appears in the Evening Post of this city. The point of it is that there is no occasion for the erection of another school, which, though it may have a high-sounding title, will be likely to prove a mere weakling. The Post advocates the concentration of resources upon a few institutions in place of their dispersion among many. There is much to be said on both sides of this question. We shall not need, when the country is fully supplied, fewer institutions than we have already. Some of them will be compelled to take lower rank than they now aspire to hold; but we do not imagine that greater harm will come upon them. Colleges do create a local interest in higher education, which may be a necessary preparation for a true university system.

But in organizing Methodist universities we work with a fundamentally false conception. We put the last first, and the first last. The kernel of a great school is a body of superior teachers, and an ample library; all the rest is merely shell. We invariably begin first to get together a huge pile of brick, stone and mortar, and lo! there is the university. It is no more a university than a stick of timber is a fruit bearing tree. It is a cover to keep the rain and cold off from those who shall be the university, and it is nothing more.

We should like to see a Methodist college for once begun at the beginning. First, an endowment of which not one dollar of the principal shall ever be spent. Second, a carefully selected corps of teachers, each one of whom shall have the privilege of a year abroad in order to perfect himself in his special studies. Third, a library so complete that scholars can use it for purposes of investigation. Fourth, the necessary apparatus for the illustration of the physical sciences. Under this method the teaching apparatus would be provided first, and the housing of all would follow after. As to that, rooms could be hired to begin with, and if the teaching were brilliant and effective the little inconveniences in this kind would soon be forgotten. The passion which possesses our founders of colleges for putting up big buildings is something wonderful. It is one of the phenomena of the age.

THE BRITISH WESLEYAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—Alderman McArthur, M. P., presided at the anniversary, held in Exeter Hall, May 4. The secretary's report stated that great progress had been made during the year. In France interest had been excited in the 900 Sunday schools existing there. Switzerland had still the largest number of schools in proportion to her population. In Holland there were 520 connected schools, 58,000 scholars and 2,111 teachers. A remarkable increase in Sunday schools in Sweden was also recorded. The Associated Sunday School Unions in the British colonies were reported as vigorous and successful in their operations. Reference was made to the extension of the jubilee building, in consequence of the increasing business of the Union, both as regards its trade and benevolent operations. It was stated that Sir Charles Reed had become treasurer of the society in place of Alderman Challis, deceased. The receipts on the sale of publications exceeded those of last year by more than £2,500. Deputations from the committee had visited various parts of England and Wales. In the thirteen metropolitan auxiliaries and 195 country unions there were 1,185 schools, 80,526 teachers and 650,317 scholars, being an increase on the numbers registered last year.—New York Christian Advocate.

ARRIVAL OF MRS. LAMBUTH.—Mrs. Lambuth and two children, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, reached Nashville safe and sound May 28, though somewhat jaded by their travel from Shanghai, especially the latter part of it—by land from California. Sister Lambuth is brimful of China—her heart is in the missionary work. She has a great deal to say about it—difficulties, successes, plans, etc.,—and brings a great many rare curiosities, about all of which we may have something to say in the future. She stays a few days with Dr. Kelley, and then proceeds to Emory and Henry College to witness the graduation of her eldest son, Walter. We congratulate both on the happy event. We hope when she returns to China she will take with her some re-enforcements for the mission. We have the men. Who will furnish the means? We wish one of the Bishops could go at the same time, as an episcopal visit is much needed.

METHODISM, says the Pittsburg Christian Advocate, has contributed some fine stock to the ministry of other bodies. The latest information of this character we find in the Methodist. It says Rev. Dr. Parker, the distinguished Congregational minister in London, was once a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry, but the superintendent put him aside for the time, because he could not decry both him and Newson Lorraine. Before another year Parker became a Congregational minister, and Lorraine afterward joined the Established Church. Dr. Stoughton, the eminent Congregationalist, of London, was also once a Methodist.

UNDER the head of "Noble Evangelists" the London Methodist says that the Marquis of Cholmondely has been preaching in St. George's Hall, and so has the Earl of Cavan, who is likewise assisting regularly at the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Lord Radstock has been preaching on the Sunday evenings at Beresford chapel, Walworth, but is now prosecuting his evangelistic labors in Russia. Lord Carrick is preaching at Castlecomer and other towns in Ireland; while a son of the Earl of Chichester has been occupied in the same way in villages of Sussex, of which county his father is lord lieutenant.

A Private Letter from the Secretaries of the Board of Missions.

DEAR ——: The General Conference which met at Louisville in 1874, after long and mature deliberation upon the part of the committee on missions, and careful and painstaking consideration upon the part of the Conference itself, adopted, as one of the articles of the constitution of the Board of Missions, the following:

"ART. 15. Any person or Sunday school, or church or Conference, may assume, in whole or in part, the support of a mission or a mission school established by the General Board, and send their contributions directly to such mission or school, of which the general treasurer shall be immediately notified: Provided, that the Conference in whose territory such moneys may be given shall have credit for the same in settling the apportionment of the General Board."

The board at its recent annual meeting in Nashville, after maturing a scheme for carrying out, as it is hoped, more efficiently the assessment plan, in its application to individual charges, determined to make this article the basis for enlarging the revenues of the board. This action is founded upon the earnest calls and most imperative demands of the work itself. Our heavenly Father has opened the doors to fields ripe to the harvest, and called men to the work who are ready to go. We seek by means suggested by the wisdom of the General Conference to arouse the church to furnish the needed supplies of money. Can we induce any individual, Sunday school, or church or Conference, to undertake, in addition to the amount assessed on said church or Conference, some special missionary work? Will any Conference propose the support of a single missionary in Mexico ($500?) Brazil ($500?) China ($750?) Will any Sunday school undertake the support of a girl or boy at a boarding school in China, $50 annually for six years? If so, they may give a name they may select to the girl or boy supported by them, and receive semi-annual reports from the missionary in charge of the school. Or undertake the support of a Mexican youth at school in the United States? Several colleges, and communities adjacent, propose to give tuition and board; it will then require $100 additional. The Sunday schools so contributing shall have from the teachers quarterly reports. Will any association of women provide for Chinese girls as above indicated? or take the support of a Bible woman at $60 annually, in China? or a school teacher, at say twice that amount, in Mexico? An association of women in Baltimore and another in Nashville have already undertaken the support of girls and Bible women in China. The board indorsed this policy, and the College of Bishops commended it to the church at large, in their meetings recently in this city. Will an individual or association come to the help of any of our missions in the great West by building a church or supporting a missionary? Money thus judiciously expended will repay the church ten fold in a very few years. We shall from time to time bring specific wants of the mission field to your attention. If we do not get responses to calls through the church papers, we must, as the board has directed, endeavor to reach the great heart of the church by private and individual approaches. This will entail almost infinite labor, but to us it will be a labor of love, and to you, we trust, of blessing; for the larger blessing is ever to the giver. We desire in all cases that money for these specific objects shall pass through or be immediately reported to the treasury, that each Conference may have full credit for all its contributions.

J. B. McFERRIN,
D. C. KELLEY,
Secretaries.

THERE were religious services again at the Academy of Music, in this city, on last Sunday night. Rev. R. Q. Mallard, of the Presbyterian Church, preached. We have been informed that the sermon was able and appropriate, and that there was a full house. The congregation, though largely composed of regular church-goers, comprised many who seldom hear the gospel, and who, moved by the novelty of the enterprise, are brought within the range of divine truth. The purpose of these services is to reach those who cannot be induced to attend the regular church services. The meetings are under the direction of a committee composed of gentlemen representing several of our Protestant denominations. The hymns are on printed slips, distributed throughout the house, two cabinet organs are used, and a large corps of singers are present. Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., preaches at the Academy of Music on next Sunday night.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the programme of the closing exercises at Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss., June 21–29, 1875. Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., is to preach the commencement sermon. R. A. Anderson, Esq., of Lexington, Miss., is to address the Alumni Association. The annual address will be delivered by Rev. John Mathews, of New Orleans. There will be the usual school exhibition, reading of compositions by the young ladies, and a vocal and instrumental concert. It will be an occasion of great interest.

REV. E. WADSWORTH, D. D., of Mobile, will preach the annual commencement sermon of Greensboro (Ala.) Female College, and Col. Joseph W. Taylor, of Tuskaloosa, has been invited to address the Mary Custis Lee Literary Society.

METHODISM IN AUSTRALASIA.—The second Wesleyan Conference of Victoria and Tasmania was held in Melbourne, January 28 till February 5. Rev. John Harcourt was elected president, and Rev. J. C. Symons, secretary. Among the visitors was Rev. Dr. Antliff, missionary secretary of the British Primitive Methodist Conference, who was most cordially received.

Rev. John Dare, whose visit to this country last year will be remembered with pleasure, was reported to be on his way home, by way of Palestine. His name was read out in the list of stationed preachers.

A plan for the introduction of lay representation was discussed and approved by a unanimous vote. The question now goes to the General Conference.

TROUBLE AMONG THE MARYLAND EPISCOPALIANS.—The diocesan convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church met in Baltimore a few days ago. Ninety clerical and seventy lay delegates were present. There was much excitement arising from the fact that Bishop Whittingham has not taken action on charges duly presented against the rector and assistant rector of Mount Calvary, for alleged violation of a canon of the church by offering prayers for the dead. It was also announced that charges had been presented to the senior bishops of the episcopal college against Bishop Whittingham for maladministration in the case.

REV. S. P. RICHARDSON, presiding elder of Union Springs district, Alabama Conference, says:

We are doing well on the district. They are paying up better, and things generally look more hopeful. Come, if you can, to our District Conference.

REV. HARSLIP, says the Galveston Christian Advocate, writes from Jefferson, May 21: "We have just closed a meeting here that resulted in fifty accessions and forty conversions."

"WELL, you have some strawberries?" asked a lady of her guest. "Yes, madam, yes; I eat strawberries with enthusiasm." "Do tell! Well, we haven't anything but cream and sugar for 'em this evening," said the matter-of-fact hostess.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request of a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they would always have the amount of the time the year ceased, they would if the whole they could, we were led to give notice to agents and subscribers, a year five years ago, that "paper would be stopped without notice, the Editor" Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid in advance before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper, he can direct the postmaster to return your paper. The will not stop it. Do not write upon it and forward it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When your subscription is out that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so express the order, send a postal card to reach us any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected the two simple methods and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter that will pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly thereupon you may look and find your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, heading the notice "Second" or "Third notice," when, in reference to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. Not postmasters have been in many instances mistaken and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Act for it yourself if you want it done, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time, has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mail himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the numbered letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

RECEIVING, FORWARDING AND STORAGE.—To country readers who are shipping or receiving goods through New Orleans, and to city readers who need a safe and reliable place for storage, we commend the Boston and Lafayette warehouses of Mr. H. M. Isaacson.—Those warehouses have been established many years, and have given, so far as we have ever heard, entire satisfaction to customers.

FURNISHING GOODS FOR GENTLEMEN AND CHILDREN.—The very large and well-assorted stock and exceedingly low prices of H. H. Stevens & Co., 135 Canal street, are worthy of attention. A list of leading articles in their line may be seen in their advertisement in another column

MARBLE WORKS.—Some of the most beautiful specimens of marble work we have ever seen were executed at the marble works of our townsmen, Messrs. Kursheedt & Benvenu. Any of our readers who are interested in any kind of marble work or builders' hardware will do well to read the advertisement of Messrs. Kursheedt & Benvenu, whom we take pleasure in recommending after having done business with them for about ten years.

DEPOT OF HOMEOPATHIC MEDICINES AND DENTAL MATERIALS.—Dr. Angell's Homeopathic Pharmacy, established at 152 Delta street, will continue to be a great convenience to those who use the books and specifics. The doctor has earned a favorable reputation among the profession, and may be relied upon, we think, as a purveyor of pure and unadulterated pharmaceutical specifics, and vends most heeded Homeopathic specifics.

VICTOR SCALES AND MARVIN'S SAFES.—Our enterprising neighbors, Messrs Gauthreaux & Wright, have moved into their new quarters at 56 Camp street, which they have tastefully fitted and fitted up for their purpose and now have One of the most handsome stocks of standard scales and safes arranged to greet the visitor. We recommend their establishment to the attention of our readers.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GINS.—The well and favorably known firm of Sears, Rose & Co., general agents for the Dubois Flange Cotton Gin, have an advertisement in another column, setting forth very clearly and briefly the advantages of the gin which they represent, and which is recommended by a generation of cotton planters.

CYPRESS LUMBER, ASH WOOD AND OAK STAVES.—We call attention to the card of Messrs. Muncy & Marcy, whose place of business is the above named articles, 321 and 136 Bolivar street. Through most of the year they receive from the firm of Messrs. Muncy & Marcy as much as a perfect satisfaction as any other wood.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

This is the critical month on a Southern farm. The May grass must be killed now or never. It ought to have been destroyed before. Just as it reared its first little blade above the earth the unrelenting plow or hoe should have buried it forever out of sight. From the earliest moment a crop can be worked, cultivation should be very rapid. The true method of saving labor is never to permit grass or weeds to get a start. Instead of one lick saving time, it will save ninety-nine. This is repeated for the benefit of young farmers—all old ones know it well enough, though they may sometimes be caught napping, or, what is worse, with empty cribs, and therefore with insufficient motive power to "speed the plow."

Early corn will be laid by this month, and peas aught, by all means, to be broadcasted at the last plowing. They will be early enough to mature, but a more important consideration is the improvement of the land. One bushel of seed per acre is too little—one and a half to two bushels will answer. Let the peas be thick enough to smother crab grass. Our corn-fields are the nurseries in which this plant perfects its seed and fills our lands with them. If the crop has been properly cultivated, and the last plowing is thorough (not deep,) and a thick crop of peas grown on the land, it will be in elegant order for a succeeding crop—clean, mellow, and filled with an abundance of nitrogen.

COTTON.

Give it every opportunity to push forward and make weed now. Bring to a stand at once, if not already done, and plow as often as practicable, with sweep or cultivator where the land is sandy or soft, with shovel where it is hard and stiff. When cotton gets fully under way developing fruit the workings may be at longer intervals and increasingly shallow, as it will then be desirable to moderate the growth of the plant.

HARVEST.

Wheat and oats should be cut before they are dead ripe; portions, however, intended for seed may be allowed to ripen fully. The wheat then makes more and better flour, and the oats are more easily digested by stock. Leave as high a stubble as possible; the lower portion of the straw is worth very little as forage, and ought to be returned to the land. The greener it is cut the smaller the bundles in which grain should be tied, and the smaller and more open the shocks in which it is put up; rapid curing and housing are the points to be kept in view. The last remark applies equally to grass and clover hay; house them at the earliest possible moment it can be done with safety. We tried once the plan of storing clover hay, rather green, with salt sprinkled through it, but could not discover that it kept any better than that packed away without the salt. Let it heat once, then tear down and expose to the air, and clover may be packed away without danger. Never let clover get wet after it is partially cured. In this connection, we invite attention to the method of preserving green forage by packing it in pits. It seems to be gaining ground in Europe, and must, therefore, give satisfactory results. The pits are dug in high, well-drained spots, and green stuff, not cured at all, packed closely away in them, and then covered with earth to exclude air.—Southern Cultivator.

In the Rural New Yorker "Daily Rural Notes" has some valuable observations about the improvement of the hickory nut. He says: "Any one who has paid any attention to our native nut-bearing trees is well aware that there are a vast number of natural wild varieties of the same species, some possessing unusual qualities and others quite inferior. The pecan nut of the South and West and our common shell-bark hickory, being the only two species remarkable for the superiority of the nuts, in an edible point of view, it is among these we should look for natural varieties for preservation and propagation. I presume that many choice varieties belonging to both species could be found, if they are not at present known, by searching the forests where these trees abound; in fact I know of several sorts which have a great local reputation, and among the shell-barks (Carya alba) none better than Hale's Papershell. There is another quite similar variety still growing on Snake Hill, in New Jersey, near New York city. At least the tree was standing two years ago, the last time I visited that well-known Mecca of botanists." Improved trees must be sought by sowing the best nuts. Grafting has been tried, and may be made to succeed, but it is an uncertain dependence.

The Frying-Pan.—Cooks are very apt to use the frying-pan for what they ought not. Too often they will use it instead of the gridiron to cook a chop or a steak; and if there is one thing in the world utterly spoiled in the cooking, it is a good rump steak cooked in a frying-pan. Yet it will often be found, even in decent houses, that chops and steaks, especially the former, are cooked in this manner. A dish of chops appears, perhaps at lunch, swimming in gravy in which can clearly be tasted the catchup that has been added. After a few minutes the gravy will be seen to be studded with blotches of grease about the size of wafers. The chops taste greasy and sodden, and the roof of the mouth becomes soon coated with hard mutton fat.

How different to a chop properly cooked on a gridiron!—black outside, red in, and brought up on a hot plate, on to which about a teaspoonful of clear red gravy may have run. The first mouthful you take ought to burn your mouth. Such is a mutton chop as it ought to be, and there are often times when an invalid or a person of delicate appetite feels as if there is nothing else he can eat. It requires, however, a tolerable thick gridiron, a clear fire and common sense.

The Best Field Beans.—The American Rural Home says that in western New York the Medium and Marrow are most planted, and the White Kidney and Early Pea to a limited extent. The Medium is considered the most reliable, as from its early ripening it is less affected by the vicissitudes of the seasons. It sells for less, however, than the other varieties named. The Marrow is quite a popular variety, and on a strong soil is very productive. It is quoted thirty-five cents a bushel higher than Medium in the Rochester market now, and the same as Kidney. The White Kidney has large stalks, requires a longer season to be matured in, and is more liable to be spoiled in ripening. When everything is favorable, however, it will produce large crops. It will, of course, make a difference in what way the beans are planted as to the quantity of seed required, but farmers generally use about a bushel of the Marrows and Medium to the acre, rather more of the Kidneys, and about one-half as much of the Pea bean.

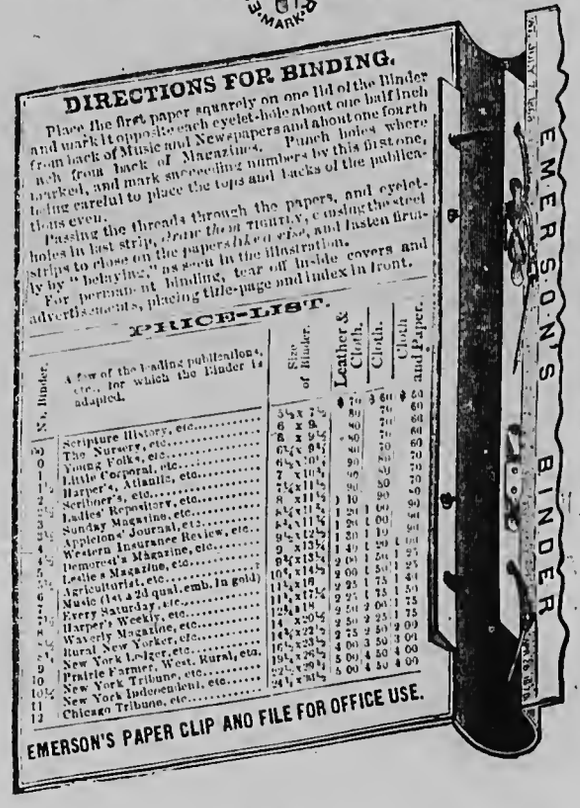
Read the EMERSON'S TRADE BINDER MARK Directions.



DIRECTIONS FOR BINDING.
Place the first paper squarely on one lid of the Binder and mark it opposite each eyelet-hole about one half inch from back of Music and Newspapers and about one fourth inch from back of Magazines. Punch holes where marked, and mark succeeding numbers by this first one, taking careful to place the tops and backs of the publications even.
Passing the threads through the papers, and eyelet-holes in last strip, draw them tightly, causing the steel strips to close on the papers, taken edge, and fasten firmly by "belaying," as seen in the illustration.
For permanent binding, tear off inside covers and advertisements, placing title-page and Index in front.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending June 6:

Mississippi river and bayous	441
Red river	61
Ouachita river	144

Mobile	2
Texas	59
Total	980

On Saturday the market opened under the depressing influence of the dispatches from Liverpool, which reported a further decline of 1-16d, the quotations being 7¾d for middling uplands and 7 15-16d. for Orleans, with sales of only 5,000 bales. New York, moreover, was weak for spot and 1-16 @ 3-32c. lower for futures. Under these circumstances, with no improvement in exchange, buyers were unwilling to go on unless at further concessions, which factors were reluctant to admit. The sales amounted to 1,800 bales. On Monday, under the favorable influence of an advance of 1-32@1-16c. in futures at New York, only partly off-set by a decline of 1-32c. in sterling exchange, factors generally adhered to their previous pretensions or contended for on-side rates, but, as the inquiry continued good, up to noon 700 bales, mid to ringed hands at prices showing no quotable variation; after which, buyers continuing the operations with a fair degree of spirit, 1,150 bales, and to-all changed hands, making a total purchase of 1,900 bales. On Tuesday the movement exhibited but little animation during the morning, when the sales were confined to retail lots, but later in the day, although in the New York dispatches reported a decline of ⅛c. in spot, and a further filling off in futures, buyers came forward with more spirit, and took 1,100 bales, making a total for the day of 1,700.

The above makes an aggregate for the three days of 5,400 bales, against 3,700 for the corresponding time last week and 4,650 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 980,811 bales, against 1,097,761 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 290,691 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 265,165—3,427 bales, against 3,691,248. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 29,788 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 39,429 to France, and of 180,759 to other foreign ports. NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information to reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The time of holding the Seashore camp meeting has been changed, and will commence on Wednesday, the twenty-first of July, instead of the fourteenth, as heretofore published, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated upon the coast, two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., open to and fronting directly upon the gulf, enjoying the healthful and refreshing breezes of the sea. Persons visiting the camp meeting will leave the New Orleans and Mobile railroad at Seashore station, from which a shaded walk of a few hundred feet will bring them to the encampment.

A large number of lots have been selected, and private tents, permanent and commodious, have been built thereon.

Other lots, pleasantly situated, will be furnished free to persons desiring to erect permanent tents thereon.

The trustees will be on the camp ground on Wednesday the second day of June, when all persons desirous of selecting lots, or otherwise interested, are invited to be present.

All permanent tents erected are required to be of value not less than $30, and shall be completed at least one week before the commencement of the camp meeting, whether they intend to occupy the lot; failing so to give notice, the lot will be forfeited and appropriated to other parties.

The Rev. William M. Jordan is appointed surveyor of the camp ground, and allowed $1.50 each for fixing the lines of the lots, to be paid by the lot-holder; and to supervise the location of each tent with reference to the preservation of the shade-trees.

Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, has advised the trustees that he will send a schooner load of lumber, suitable for building tents, which will be delivered on the camp ground and sold at reasonable prices, so that persons wishing to build or to improve their tents can be supplied at the camp ground with all kinds of lumber.

A limited number of tents of different sizes will be for rent, particulars of which will hereafter be published.

Favorable reductions of fare on the railroads have been secured, which, with particulars of hours of departure, etc., will be published hereafter.

Persons intending to build or make improvements upon their tents are earnestly requested to do so at an early date, so as to be through completely and ready for the meeting when it commences.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any of the board of trustees; William Otis and John Ellsworth, Mobile; H. C. Vaughn, Moss Point; R. S. Rickey, P. Hallaran, J. H. Kether, B. D. L. Rayne, G. W. W. Goodwyn and W. H. Foster, New Orleans.

THE camp meeting at Jones' camp ground, Castor circuit, Homer district, will commence August 18, 1875. We desire all to tent who can. Preachers are especially invited to attend. This camp ground is situated about three miles east of Vernon, in Jackson parish, La., and can boast of some of the finest mineral springs in the country.

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1875. NO. 25.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, June 8.—The one hundredth birthday of Father Henry Boehm, of the Newark Methodist Episcopal Conference, and the seventy-sixth of his ministry, was celebrated to-day in Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Jersey City. The church was crowded, the audience including many ministers. The venerable father arrived some time after the commencement of the services and remained until the close. Addresses were made by Bishop Simpson and others. Father Boehm is said to be the oldest minister in the United States. He was born in Lancaster county, Pa.

NEW YORK, June 9.—The representative in this city of the Direct United States Cable Company announces that the laying of their cable has been completed, and communication is thereby established between Ireland and the New Hampshire coast.

The superintendent of the Direct United States Cable Company reports that the new cable is working well, and the signals transmitted are perfect. The line is still in the hands of contractors.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 10.—The steamship City of Takio, from Hong Kong, brings the following: An attack was made, May 1, upon the American Methodist Episcopal church in Kinkiang, in consequence of a superstitious belief among the natives that the children were maltreated by the missionaries.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The steamship Vicksburg, sunk by the ice, was a screw steamer of 2,484 tons gross burden, and was built in 1872. She belonged to the Liverpool, Mississippi and Dominion Steamship Company, of Liverpool, and hailed from that port.

During the winter she usually plied between New Orleans and Liverpool, and in summer in the North American trade. The captain of the State of Georgia says that after taking the five men on board he kept the men at the masthead all day till dark, looking out for the other two boats, all of which time he was passing through icebergs and floe ice.

BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS, June 12.—This morning Capt. McNeely, of the State troops, with a few of his men, pursued and, after a forced march of twenty-five miles, overtook a band of twelve cattle thieves about twelve miles below this place. They showed fight, and in the engagement which ensued the whole band of raiders were killed. McNeely lost one man killed, Berry Smith, two horses killed and one wounded. He recaptured two hundred and fifty head of stolen cattle.

SELMA, ALA., June 12.—S. J. Saffold, a very prominent citizen, died here to-day. He was for several years president of the State Press Association, and formerly editor of the Daily Times.

NEW YORK, June 15.—The reception of the intelligence that William M. Tweed had been discharged by the Court of Appeals, at Albany, created a profound sensation here to-day. Tweed received the news from Foster Dewey, his private secretary. He received the announcement calmly, arguing that he was innocent and was willing to meet justice.

He was subsequently informed that a deputy sheriff was in waiting to rearrest him on another suit. He said that did not matter, inasmuch as he was prepared to give the requisite amount of bail.

OMAHA, June 15.—The city is full of grasshoppers, stragglers from the vast army which passed over here yesterday. Private gardens, fruit-trees and all sorts of vegetation have been injured to a great extent.

Dispatches to-night from the principal portions of the State say the grasshoppers are passing northward, and doing little or no damage.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 30, via Havana, June 9.—The articles of impeachment brought by Gen. Riva Palacio against the president of the republic specify the violation of several clauses of the constitution. Congress on the tenth instant refused to try the charges by a vote of 128 to 10.

Congress had definitely approved the Plumb International Railroad contract by a vote of 116 to 13. By the terms of the contract the construction of the road must be commenced within three years. The building of this road will do much to put an end to the border trouble.

The foundations have been laid for a monument to the memory of the late President Juarez.

A conflagration in Minatitlan has destroyed thirty buildings. Many families are thereby rendered homeless. The total loss is estimated at $400,000.

Slight shocks of an earthquake have been felt at Jalisco.

Quicksilver is still found in abundance in the Zacatecas mines, but the yield is falling off and will soon be reduced to $50 per quintal.

LONDON, June 9.—The steamship with the Sultan of Zanzibar and suite on board has arrived at Gravesend.

The Paris correspondent of the Times, alluding to the rumors of a Republican movement in Madrid, says those who are watching the course of affairs in Spain are satisfied that the Alfonsist government is apprehensive.

They assert that the Spanish embassador at Paris has renewed his complaints relative to the tolerance of the Carlists on the frontier, and has warmly protested against ostensible charity fetes, the real object of which is to raise money in Paris for Carlists.

It is supposed France will pay less attention to these complaints than formerly, as Germany at present takes slight interest in the cause of King Alfonso, whose government is too weak to pursue a course agreeable to Germany.

Competent authority—an attache of the Spanish embassy in Paris—officially reports that the Carlists muster forty-five thousand good soldiers, besides an equal number of second-rates, and will continue to be victorious so long as the war is conducted as at present.

A dispatch from Vienna says the Princess Windischgratz has sent three million florins to Don Carlos.

PARIS, June 10.—A violent storm passed over this city yesterday. Much window glass was broken, and thousands of chimneys blown over. Many accidents occurred, and traffic is wholly suspended in the streets. The storm extended to the south of France, and from Pyrenees comes a report that a house was prostrated and eleven persons were killed. The damage in Paris alone is estimated at eleven million francs.

HALIFAX, June 12.—The steamer Virgo, from Halifax, Newfoundland, went ashore on St. Pierre Island, and will probably be a total loss. The passengers and crew were saved and the mails safely landed. The vessel, valued at $75,000, formerly plied between New York and Savannah. Very little cargo was saved.

BERLIN, June 14.—The Post says the officers of the United States squadron have received a most cordial welcome in Berlin from the Prince Imperial and the chief of the German admiralty. The American residents are to give a banquet in their honor.

Hon. Carl Schurz will return to America in October. He intends to stay a short time in England.

The upper house of the Prussian Diet has adjourned after finally passing the bill withdrawing State grants from the Roman Catholic clergy, and reading for the second time the bill abrogating three clauses of the constitution.

From the Work.

MANSFIELD, LA.—Mr. Editor: In the midst of the general depression I give you a few encouraging items from north Louisiana.

Money is scarce, of course. It is almost impossible to command it for any purpose; and yet for foreign missions Mansfield and Pleasant Hill have overpaid their assessments, and in addition Mrs. Maria Childers and her daughter, Miss M. E. Childers, of Pleasant Hill, gave $50 each, which swells the collection considerably.

Last Friday we had a grand Sunday school demonstration. All the schools in town united in a celebration. There were over two hundred members of the different schools in attendance, besides a large number of visitors, and all seemed delighted. The day was emphatically the children's day. They were not tasked beforehand in getting ready to entertain the grown people, and then there was no yawning and writhing under a long, dry speech. Instead of an affliction, it was a pleasure to them, just as such things should be.

Our Sunday school is, of course, the largest, as our church is in the ascendency in the town; and then in the person of Bro. J. L. Scales we have a most efficient superintendent, and he is assisted by a number of faithful teachers. The Mansfield church has a fine "working force," but we have some "elect ladies" that are hardly equaled anywhere.

You have the programme of commencement exercises. I hope everybody will see it, and that everybody interested will attend. Bro. Armstrong closes up his first year very much to the satisfaction of his patrons, and the prospects of the institution are brightening. Bro. Armstrong will travel as extensively as he can in vacation. Will the preachers give him all the help they can?

In the fall camp meetings are to be held near here, and as the crops are now promising we hope, under the blessing of God, at the end of the year to be able once more to bring up the finances and report general prosperity. Fraternally,

J. M. BROWN.

JUNE 9, 1875.

GRASSHOPPERS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.—Says a Fort Gibson dispatch of the first: "Millions of grasshoppers essayed their new wings on Sunday, rising like swarms of bees, and started in a westerly direction. The air was filled like a cloud over the sun at ten o'clock. The Grand, Verdigris and Arkansas rivers were covered with the dead hoppers that failed to fly across at the start. We bid them adieu without a pang of regret."

A LITTLE GIRL, when asked by her mother about suspicious bites in the sides of a dozen choice apples, answered: "Perhaps, mamma, they have been frost-bitten; it was so cold last night."

AN EARLY SPRING—Jumping out of bed at five o'clock in the morning.

Mission to Brazil.

The Board of Missions, at its session in May, recognized the Rev. J. E. Newman, of Saltinho, district of Limeira, province of San Paulo, as our missionary at that point. Bro. Newman is an old member of the Alabama Conference, well and favorably known to all of the older members of that body. He entered the Conference in the same class with Bishop McTyeire, and is well known to Dr. Summers, both of whom speak in terms of warm commendation of the man and his work. Dr. Haygood had written, some months since, to Bro. Newman, and we have just received his reply. His letter is a long one, and highly encouraging. Of the government he says that full toleration is guaranteed to all Protestant churches. He assures us that the people, on considerations which he details with skill and evidently sound practical observation, are peculiarly open to Protestant preaching. As a general rule the Brazilians are a kind and hospitable people. There are hundreds around me who have no place of worship nearer than twelve miles. He further says: "The population of this empire is estimated at 12,000 000. I suppose there are not more than one-half, if so much, of pure European descent. Quite one-half of the population is negro or mulatto, or negro-Indian. The number of negro slaves is probably 1,500,000, and the laws passed to extinguish slavery will effect that object within twenty-five years—I think not sooner. This province has a population of nearly 1,000,000—over 100,000 of that number are slaves. The population of this province, and of the two south of it, Parana and Rio Grande do Sul, have a less mixture of races than those farther north. The province of Parana has a population of 150,000. Rio Grande do Sul over 500 000, with perhaps 90,000 slaves. Minas Geraes has a population of 1,500,000, with perhaps 150,000 slaves. This province joins San Paulo on the north, as also the province of Rio de Janeiro does. This latter has a population of nearly 1,000 000, with some 200,000 slaves. A very large portion of this province, and also the provinces of Parana and Minas Geraes, is table-land, with an elevation of from 4,000 to 5,000 feet above the sea, with a climate as pleasant and healthy as any part of the globe. In all this region the thermometer seldom rises above 84°, and with very light frost in winter; indeed, large districts are entirely free from frost. This province has a fine soil, and every production known in the Southern States grows finely here. It is easier to make two bushels of corn here than one in Alabama; besides, on plowed lands the corn seldom or never fails. I have been in the province nearly six years, and there has not been one year when fair crops of corn were not made, from 25 to 30 bushels per acre on good lands; indeed, all crops are much surer than in Alabama and Georgia. The common roads are not so good as in some parts of the States. Quite a number of railroads are being built in various parts of this province, and also in others, on all of which there are more or less American or English contractors and skilled laborers.

"There are numerous towns in this province containing from 3,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, and in almost all those towns there are many Germans. Some of them are Catholics, but much the larger portion are Protestants; and hence if you could send us a man who could preach in German he could have access to many hundreds who have no pastor to care for them. I know of but two German ministers in this part of the province, and they are the only dependence for religious instruction to probably 15,000 Germans, comprising three or four counties. Those counties, or districts, are about as our counties in the States. Nearly all the towns in this province have enough of German population to gather a congregation for preaching. The great majority of them are Lutherans in sentiment, and they are peculiarly accessible to our German Methodist preachers; and if you can send us one that can preach in German and English, he can be supported from the start. The plan is to preach one Sabbath in each month to our Methodist church near Santa Barbara, and the balance of his time to the Germans in Santa Barbara, in Rio Clara, Piricacaba, and other towns within reach. I think there are at least 1,500 Germans in the two last-named towns and vicinity. The two German Lutheran ministers here are evangelical, and are supported by those to whom they preach; and if you will send us a good and competent man we can support him and his family, if they are not very burdensome. Here we have no fears about the provision for his family. Thank God, we have but little trouble here about supplies for our tables. I mean we can and do easily make plentiful supplies of good plain food—corn, meat, rice, milk, butter, potatoes, and all kinds of vegetables, with many varieties of fruit, especially oranges and bananas. We want you to send us one German minister of the right kind, and I think he will soon write to you for several more. Here, then, is an open door for you, and it will cost you but little, except the expense of getting your men here. The field is new, and no one has yet entered it except the two Lutherans I have named. They will co-operate with you. There is room for perhaps a dozen men now in this province, and if we manage wisely this work will require very little money. Again, a sprightly young German can, within two years, while preaching to his own people, learn Portuguese, and preach in that language too. I therefore especially and earnestly commend this German feature of the work to your attention. I am sure the work will prosper from the start if you can find the right kind of men. Send men of pure piety and good common sense, and God will bless their work.

"The two divisions of the Presbyterians are certainly succeeding well here—and they work in perfect harmony—and would be glad to see us in the field. The Southern have a church in Campinas of nearly 100 members, with a school of 150 pupils, and I think two other small churches. So far they work chiefly in Campinas. They are starting, too, at Pernambuco. The Northern Presbyterians have, in addition to some four or five Americans, some six young men, Brazilians or Portuguese, now actively engaged in preaching. They are extending their work a good deal, and are much encouraged.

"As to your recognition of myself as a missionary, I will merely say I would have been much gratified with this some years ago, but we tried to get recognition in some way two years ago, but could not then attract the slightest notice. But our little church is as truly loyal to Southern Methodism as though we had the most flattering recognition from 'home;' and I am sure there is no part of the church at 'home' that will do as much as our little band, in proportion to our strength, to plant our common Methodism in this goodly land. We number but 29 or 30 members, but we keep our discipline in the church, and often, very often, our hearts are made glad by the divine presence. We are not anxious for numbers, but for a pure and living church.

J. E. NEWMAN."

Bro. Newman encourages us to send to certain points, which he mentions, young men, thoroughly educated, who are competent to teach; gives a plan by which they can be employed in teaching while they are acquiring the Portuguese language, and getting ready for preaching. He further indicates that a limited number of such men, carefully selected, could be supported almost at once. We are very fortunate in having a man such as Bro. Newman on the ground, with seven years of residence, and due opportunity and capacity for observation.

Here is a field on our own continent, of favorable climate, on whose sympathy we of the South have the strongest claims—a stable government, strongly inclined to education and progress—a people who, as education increases, are growing out of Romanism into infidelity. The call upon the church has the Macedonian ring. There are two young men ready to go. Can the board, with pledges on hand beyond collections of previous years, dare to make an advance? Who will cut the knot? Who will say: "Here is five hundred dollars; send the two men?" If you make the pledge for one year, make it for three, and the board will take into favorable consideration the offer.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILROAD.—Formation of the Directory. It is gratifying to learn that the furtherance of this road is being taken into serious and practical consideration, and that there is now a definite prospect of an early communication with Texas. For some time past several prominent gentlemen have been actively engaged in bringing the preliminaries to a focus, and on yesterday they succeeded in electing the following officers and board of directors:

E. B. Wheelock, president; Dr. H. Kennedy, vice president; S. H. Kennedy, treasurer; E. L. Raulett, secretary.

Board of Directors—S. H. Kennedy, John Phelps, Cyrus Bussey, Emory Clapp, John H. Kennedy, Louis Schneider, George Jonas, Julius Weis, E. L. Raulett, David Wallace, E. B. Wheelock, G. W. R. Bayley, Dr. H. Kennedy, W. T. Schmidt, James Girdner.

Messrs. Kennard, Howe and Prentiss were elected attorneys of the road.

From the above names it may be safely expected that the work will be pushed forward with all possible rapidity, and with the intelligence and completeness which such an array of prominent and reliable citizens suggests. A plan will shortly be presented of the manner in which the company proposes to prosecute the undertaking, and one which will be well worthy of the practical consideration of the citizens generally.—New Orleans Picayune, June 12.

A CARD.—At a meeting of the officers and teachers of the Algiers Methodist Episcopal Church South Sunday school, held in the school-room, May 30, 1875, it was unanimously

Resolved, That this school tender their grateful acknowledgments to Capt. Kouns and officers of the steamer Oriole for the very pleasant and agreeable trip made on their boat on Saturday, May 22, 1875, to and from the picnic grounds, fifteen miles below the city.

Resolved, That this card be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Evangelists in Memphis.

MR. EDITOR: In Memphis there is a pastors' association, composed of Presbyterians, Methodists (North and South,) Baptists, Congregationalists, Lutherans, Cumberlands and Campbellites. The pastors of these several churches—about twenty-three in all—are the exponents of about sixteen thousand people. It required years of effort to effect this union, but it was effected. Some laymen of these several churches took it into their heads to invite Messrs. Whittle and Bliss to hold a series of meetings in Memphis. They replied that they could not entertain the request unless the pastors indorsed it. This the pastors did unanimously. Then Messrs. Whittle and Bliss appointed the day on which they would begin. They also directed that the interval be employed as follows: First, that a union prayer meeting be held daily. Second, that each church hold two or three prayer meetings weekly. Also that posters announcing the meeting be struck off and sent to every house in the city, and that the largest building possible be obtained in which to hold their meetings. These directions were followed to the letter. The prayer meetings in the churches were held. The union prayer meetings were held. Pretty soon it appeared that no denominations attended these meetings. People lost sight of being Methodists or Baptists or Presbyterians. Before the revivalists appeared the victory had been achieved—a complete union of church effort. Then Messrs. Whittle and Bliss began—the former to preach, the latter to sing. While I cannot indorse all of Mr. Whittle's theology, yet I must confess I never heard such a preacher. There is more gospel and less preaching in his sermons than I ever heard—that is, his sermons are made up of reading and expounding of Scripture. Mr. Bliss excels all men in song I ever heard. Every word is distinctly uttered, the emphasis is duly placed, and all in a rich, deep, sweet voice.

Pretty soon the Greenlaw Opera House was too small to hold the vast crowd. They moved into the Exposition building, and that has been filled. Not less than four thousand people assembled to hear the word. The results may be gathered from Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, saints and sinners. Hundreds have been converted, and thousands have been awakened, and yet the work seems to be only in its incipiency.

MEMPHIS, June 8, 1875.

Eight Don'ts.

FOR CHURCH MEMBERS.

1. Don't call your preacher "parson."

2. Don't turn critic of the sermon at the dinner-table.

3. Don't wait for your pastor to say, "Can I pray with you?" when he visits you.

4. Don't expect your preacher to raise all the tunes at prayer meeting.

5. Don't spend the dollars for tobacco, cigars, etc., and give the nickels to your pastor.

6. Don't join in any kind of slander or small talk against your preacher.

7. Don't get mad should the sermon or exhortation draw a blister on your conscience. It will do you good.

8. Don't go to sleep in church. Keep awake. It will improve the sermon and add to "good looks."

EIGHT DON'TS.—FOR PREACHERS.

1. Don't scold your people.

2. Don't spit tobacco on the pulpit.

3. Don't go on the street with a pipe in your mouth, or the stem of one sticking out of your pocket.

4. Don't say, "One word more and I have done," unless you stop "at the time."

5. Don't deal in "slang" in the pulpit, or out of it.

6. Don't say of your brother: "He's a poor preacher." Others might think otherwise.

7. Don't scream when you preach. "Preaching is earnest talking."

8. Don't linger your watch-chain or thrust your hands into your pockets while preaching.

SUFFERING WITH CHRIST.—Shall I not be ashamed of the roses around my brow when I see him and all the princes of his kingdom with the crown of thorns?

A GREAT nature reveals itself less by its escapes than by its recoveries, as sickness shows the native vigor of the constitution.—W. T. Clarke.

A Question.

DEAR SIR: Will you please be so kind as to answer the following through the ADVOCATE:

The other day I attended the funeral ceremony of a child, conducted by a Methodist minister, who in the discourse said that the child was now in heaven in the arms of Jesus; but afterward said that it would sleep until the last great day, when it would arise and be received among the blessed in heaven.

Now what I wish to know: Is this the doctrine of the Methodist Church concerning the life after death? and, if so, how does it harmonize this seeming (if not real) inconsistency?

Hope you will not throw this aside, but answer as soon as possible.

Will the editor suffer me to reply to the above question, which I cut from the ADVOCATE of June 3, not at all contradictory to, but a little different from the answer which you gave it?

1. Neither our church nor any other has any creed or affirmative doctrine on the question here presented, for the reason that it lies entirely beyond the domain of the human understanding. We have some knowledge of this present mode of existence, but none whatever of that in the next world. The matter is not explained in Revelation, for the reason that Revelation is addressed to mere human intellect. Our ideas of periodicity are exclusively confined to this present mode of life, and have no meaning whatever when attempted to be applied to the mode of life over yonder. Therefore all words implying periodicity, such as "now," contrasted with some other period, "afterward," "until the last great day," "when," "after," etc., are absolutely without meaning in the human mind when predicated of something in the other world. Time belongs exclusively to this world; the next is eternal; and a periodical eternity is a contradiction destroying the very idea of an eternal state. We must content ourselves to use human faculties only.

2. It may be said the Scriptures use such terms as I exclude. Of course they do, but not in a scientific or philosophical or polemical sense, but solely in an accommodated sense, as we would dilute and modify language when addressing children. It would be unpardonably pedantic and hypercritical to subject Scripture language, when instructing us in things verging out upon the infinite, to philosophic and scientific rules of criticism.

The error of your inquirer is in supposing that the mode of existence in the other world is necessarily periodical, as in this. You very properly remind him that his supposed "inconsistency" of his "preacher and Scripture" is in accordance with our accepted standards.

This subject is enlarged and elaborated a little in a paper headed "Eternity," in, I believe, the July number (1850) of the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, then edited by Bishop Bascom. By mistake, the lamented death of the Bishop occurring soon after the publication, that essay has generally passed as his production, though it was written by myself.

THE NARROW HOUSE.

A narrow home, but very still it seemeth
A silent home to stir of mirth there.
Who wins that pillow of no sorrow dreameth,
No whirling cosines lar his sealed ear.
The tired hand lies very calm and quiet.
The weary foot no more hard paths will tread,
The great world may revolve in clashing riot.
To this loud summons keeps not heart nor head.

The violets bloom above the tranquil sleeper,
The morning dew fall gently on the grass.
And Dorcas kneels the lonely weeper,
He knows not when her footsteps pass
The autumn winds sigh softly o'er his slumber,
The winter piles the snowdrifts o'er his rest:
He does not care the living year to number—
The narrow home contents his silent guest.

No hallest hope can haunt, no doubt perplexes,
No parted love the dear repose can chide.
Nor pity care can ask, nor trouble vexes;
From misconstruing lips his lonel heart is safe.
Free from the weariness of worldly fretting,
From sin and all it does—its toil and strife,
From the cold wintry coldness of vain regretting,
He dies, whose course had passed away from life.

A narrow home, and far beyond it lieth
The land whereof no mortal lips can tell.
We strain our sad eyes as the spirit flieth,
The fairer vision however, he shall dwell.
God shuts the door no mortal lip unclosing,
They whom Christ raised no word of guidance said,
Only the cross speaks where our dust reposes:
"Trust him who calls unto his rest our dead."

All the Year Round.

A Chapter on Reason and Faith.—No. 1.

BY REV. W. SPILLMAN, M. D., ENTERPRISE, MISS.

When Adam was made it was in the image of God, and he was endowed with the faculty of reasoning, of tracing cause to effect, and vice versa. This was the greatest gift that an all-wise God could have bestowed upon him; and while he remained in a state of purity the exercise of this faculty always led to the development of truth. By it he was enabled to enjoy the riches and beauties of nature; to rise from the wonders of creation to the omnipotent Author of all beings, and was thus placed in a rank far superior to that of any other subluinary creature. But when he, by violating the law of God, fell from his purity, and thus brought upon himself the awful penalty of spiritual death, his understanding became darkened, and all the faculties of his mind obscured, so that his reasoning did not at all times and under all circumstances lead to truth; and this is evident from the fact that reasoning led him to believe that he could hide himself from the presence of the Lord. This darkness of the understanding and obscurity of the faculty of reasoning has been transmitted to all his posterity, leading first one and then another into the labyrinths of doubt and darkness—errors great, sins gross, and limited ideas of the Almighty.

It is evident, however, that there is no faculty given to man for which he should be more thankful to his Creator, not one that he should devote more constantly and zealously to the service of God, than that of reason; but this unfortunately is but seldom the case. There are men of strong reasoning powers, and their name is Legion, who make it their chief business of life to carry on an open warfare against the Almighty. There are men who are not thankful to their Creator for the faculty of reasoning, but proud of the power of their minds and of their intellectual attainments, professing—and may I not say even boasting?—that they reject everything that they cannot reduce to a mathematical certainty. Consequently they do not hesitate to arraign the Almighty at the bar of reason, and refuse to obey his commands, because in their limited judgments they seem unreasonable. Hence, as expressed in the book of Job: "Great men are not always wise; neither do the aged understand judgment."

As to the uncertainties of reason and the judgment of men, there are ample proofs in his past history. A review of the past will show that the errors of one have been overthrown not always by truth, but by the errors of another; while science in reality has principally been collated in fragments found in a confused mass of errors. In the immense and trackless regions of metaphysics there can be but little found but uncertainty and doubt; and with a compass no truer than metaphysics, and a pilot no safer than reason, man's frail bark is often in great danger of a wreck upon the shoals of error. In a word, so limited and obscured are all the faculties of the mind of man "that the extent of his virtues borders upon vices, and the extent of his wisdom upon error."

It is, however, by reason alone that man is so eminently distinguished from the balance of animal creation; and when bereft of this important gift he sinks even below the level of the brute. Reason is the mainspring, when associated with hope, of all the laudable actions of man, and the only inherent guide to the discovery of truth. But while this consideration induces man to make it the source of his judgment, the facility with which it may lead him into error should ever put him upon his guard against its conclusions in matters that are in their nature far above the comprehension of man, and also to seek after that "understanding that cometh by the inspiration of the Almighty."

The discovery of truth, even in a temporal point, is of the utmost importance to man. It was in part that he might attain so desirable an end that he was endowed with the power of reasoning. It is by comparing several ideas, one with another, that man is enabled to determine whether they agree or disagree, and then to draw his conclusions accordingly. Therefore his judgment originates in his ideas, and the truth or fallacy of the former is dependent upon the correctness or incorrectness of the latter. Were it in the power of man to acquire a perfect knowledge of the nature of things, and to attain a clear perception of truth at all times and under all circumstances, reason could not then lead him into error. But such is the ignorance and limited powers of his judgment that it is often conjectural, and frequently erroneous. The ideas upon which judgment is founded are transmitted to the mind through the medium of the senses—through a medium which is proved by daily experience to be in a great measure deceptive. Hence we find that the opinions of men are at variance upon things temporal.

If, then, reason cannot enable man to see and understand things and circumstances as they are in reality, in matters that fall within the boundaries of their senses, how shall they venture to take it as an infallible guide on subjects that are in their nature far above human comprehension, glimpses of which can only be gained by that understanding which cometh to the aid of reason by the "inspiration of the Almighty." Even when reason proceeds upon the most incontestable data it is liable to wander far from the paths of truth, and can seldom attain to anything like certainty. Hence those who take it as their only guide as to what they should believe, are apt to adopt opinions not less absurd than contradictory, and therefore opposite to truth. Calvin, for instance, by taking into consideration the infinite justice of God, concluded that a definite portion could only be saved, and the balance, to vindicate the justice of God, must suffer eternal punishment; while the founders of Universalism, looking alone at the enduring mercy of God, concluded that all men, regardless of their conduct here, would be saved. In a word, all the skepticism and infidelity in the world originated in an undue estimate of the faculty of reasoning.

In what a vortex of difficulties are men often placed who admit reason as the only judge of what they must believe! As an illustration of this truth, we need only look at the history of France in the time of her infidelity, when the Goddess of Reason was placed upon the ruins of the tabernacle, and a new Pantheon of deified passions sprang from the ashes of the churches; when the gospel of Jesus Christ was trampled to the ground, and the most impious and licentious effusions circulated from every press; when the shout of victory was heard from the temple of Reason; when philosophy was enshrined upon the altars, and the name of Christianity obliterated; when to be a worshiper of the true God was a crime, to be a follower of him who died on Calvary a disgrace, and his church, with all the holy institutions, together with the Sabbaths of the Lord, were regarded as a farce. And then look at what followed! The tempest, that gathered and hung in all its horror over France, burst upon the heads of her devoted inhabitants.

The discovery of truth is of infinite importance to man; so very important that he should use every appliance within his power to avoid being led into an error. But man is more inclined to credit what he knows, or thinks that he knows, than what reaches him through the testimony of others. It would be, without the least shadow of doubt, unreasonable to deny the existence of a thing or the truth of an assertion because neither one nor the other are consonant with preconceived ideas of probabilities or improbabilities. The concurring testimony of respectable eye-witnesses, and the certainty that they could have no interest in deceiving others, is sufficient ground to command credence in their testimony, however improbable the thing or circumstance may seem. Hence Hume's argument against miracles is an absurdity, for "all witnesses do not lie." Again, it is an absurdity for a man to say that he will not believe in, be made a partaker of or countenance anything, though affirmed by many witnesses, if it be "contrary to his own experience" or preconceived opinions. In such a case a man would be bound to starve to death because it would be impossible for him to fully understand how the food he eats is assimilated, and made flesh, tissues, glands, nerves and bones. He would refrain from eating a sour or sweet apple because he could not comprehend the mysterious chemical laboratory of the apple-tree, by which one takes up sweetness from the earth and another acids. Man is surrounded by mysteries, and it will not do for him to so glory in his reasoning powers as to reject everything that he cannot comprehend. Daniel Webster was once asked by a skeptical friend if he could comprehend how Jesus Christ could be both God and man. "No, sir," was his reply, and then added: "I should be ashamed to acknowledge him as my Savior if I could comprehend him. Such is my sense of sin, and consciousness of my inability to save myself, that I feel that I need a superhuman Savior—one so great and glorious that I cannot comprehend him."

The inclination to believe or disbelieve generally depends upon the tenacity of the prejudices and extent of the knowledge of the man. For instance, take an illiterate man, who has been reared up in one of the tropical islands, and tell him that water can be congealed into crystals beautiful as diamonds, and that it often falls from the clouds in feathery flakes whiter than the down on a swan's breast, and he will not believe you. And wherefore? Because it is contrary to his experience, and, according to his mode of reasoning, impossible. Since, then, knowing that things apparently impossible do exist, man as a rational being should be sensible of the necessity of credence in the testimony of respectable and unprejudiced witnesses.

It then betokens ignorance and a defect in reasoning for a man to say: "I believe in nothing which I cannot see and comprehend; and as I cannot see or comprehend an intelligent, immaterial and invisible existence, therefore I cannot believe in such a being."

How to Support the Preacher.

MR. EDITOR: Much has been written of late upon the support of the ministry. The duty of the church and people to contribute of their substance to those who minister to them in holy things has been presented and inculcated in the strong light of Scripture precept and example; and doubtless every true Christian assents to the propriety of his pastor's giving himself "wholly to the ministry of the word and to prayer."

The responsibilities of the stewards have been expatiated upon at great length. They stand between the people and their pastor, and his efficiency as a preacher depends greatly upon their efficiency as stewards. If they are delinquent in their office the pastor's thoughts must be turned to the cares of this world; and in proportion as this is the case his usefulness is limited. The success of the gospel is therefore, to a great extent, committed into the hands of the stewards. Hence their position becomes one of weighty responsibility. This, of course, is felt by every intelligent steward, and no other man should ever be elevated to that office. What remains to be done, therefore, is to supply practical suggestions, that the unpractised stewards—and their name is Legion—may see how to carry out their convictions of duty.

I propose to present a few suggestions of this sort. In the first place, go yourself to your preacher and ascertain his circumstances. Find out how much provision he has on hand—how much flour, meat, molasses, etc.; find out how much corn he has to feed his horse. Perhaps he needs a barrel of flour, one hundred pounds of meat, ten gallons of molasses and ten bushels of corn; also $25 in money. To discover these facts will require no expenditure of time. Ten minutes before preaching or at your own fireside, or at your table, will suffice for this purpose. The next thing to be done is to raise these amounts. This is the difficult part. Here your heart begins to fail you. You begin to think: "I can't collect anything, and I dislike to try. I wish the people would pay without being urged to do so." But don't despair. Summon up courage. Perhaps the people are just waiting for you to let them know what they are expected to pay. At the next appointment, if it will not be too late, at some suitable time, tell the brethren your preacher's circumstances. First he needs a barrel of flour. Secure one thing at a time. But the times are hard, and the brethren say they have no money. There you say: "We had as well quit at once." By no means. Say to the brethren: "Can't one of you, or two, or even three of you, go to your merchant and get our preacher a barrel of flour?" Nine times out of ten this will be sufficient. The flour will be secured. The next thing is one hundred pounds of meat. Let two or three unite, and that will be secured. Then comes ten gallons of molasses. Say to the brethren: "Can't ten of us furnish one gallon each from what we have on hand?" This will be secured in less than the same number of minutes. So with the ten bushels of corn.

Now perhaps the preacher has no way of getting these things home. Ask some brother, who has a wagon and team, if he can't find a spare day in which he can take these things to the preacher's home. Some one will go.

But how about the $25? The cry is: "Money is scarce and hard to get." Money in large quantities is always scarce; but in the hardest times almost every person has some. Ask if there are not ten persons who can pay $1 each—if not to-day, some time next week. That will be secured. Then there are $15 yet to be raised. Call for thirty persons who will pay fifty cents each. Enough will respond, without doubt. So there you will have the entire amount provided for, and no extra exertions required.

This is a practicable method of bringing the tithes into God's storehouse, and wherever it is tried it will succeed. It is much better to provide for the support of our preachers in this way than for them to have to go in debt, and pay a large per cent. for credit. Besides, the people can pay much more in this way than at the end of the year in cash. If any think this a good method in theory, let them try it and it will prove a good method in practice. Brethren, try it.

Obituaries.

MRS. KEZIA E. STOCKING, relict of the Hon. John Stocking, Jr., formerly of Mobile, Ala., was born in the State of Georgia, April 29, 1805. She was the daughter of Capt. Henry Beard, formerly of Georgia, but for many years a resident of Baldwin and Mobile counties, in the State of Alabama. Our mother always had religious convictions from an early age, but not until 1841 or 1842 did she make a public profession of religion and attach herself to the Methodist Church. She at once took high ground in reference to duty and privilege. Though a widow, and not one of her household religious at the time, she erected the family altar at her hearthstone, and regularly morning and evening, there went up the smoking sacrifice to the living God. This she continued as long as her physical ability permitted. She was gifted in prayer, and though naturally timid, and modest almost to suffering, her voice, whenever called for, was heard in the class-room prayer meeting, and even in the great congregation, in seasons of awakening in the church. She was the leader of a female class for many years in Mobile, and also of a ladies' prayer meeting. She was diligent in all works of charity and mercy. An excellent nurse, she was constantly in requisition at the bedsides of suffering, administering to their bodily wants, pointing the erring to the merciful Savior, or cheering the pilgrim Christian, as he entered the dark valley, by recalling the precious promises made to such. She had an unshaken trust and confidence in her God and Savior. She believed God without any reservation. The writer hereof owes his conviction for sin and call to the ministry to the answer to a night, a whole night, of prayer, offered by this holy woman on her knees, wrestling for this one thing—the conversion and call to the ministry of her first-born son, who was at that time a wild, irreligious, dissipated boy. She has often told me since that satan frequently, during the night, tempted her to give over the struggle, on the ground that I was too wicked myself, and had such associations as to make the thing impossible; but she had read in her Bible that Christ said: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, I will do it;" and she believed it. Just before the day broke she had the blessed assurance that her faith had prevailed, and ere many suns had risen and set she had the joy to have that boy brought home to her a weeping penitent, struck down, Saul-like, on the highway. Rev. Lovick Pierce and Bishop Keener will both remember something of this.

After her removal to Texas, thirty odd years ago, she was deprived, in a large measure, of the privileges of God's house; but her faith never faltered. She lived to glorify God. She started for heaven alone—not one of her family in the church—a widow with six children. Such was the force of her pious example, godly admonition, and constant prayerfulness and unwavering faith, that she had the happiness, years ago, to see every one of her children happily converted, and members of the church of her choice.

I make this record to-day: that I never saw in my mother an action or heard a word from her lips that was not in accordance with Christian propriety.

Had she lived sixteen days longer she would have completed the full measure of threescore years and ten. Ever of a frail constitution, none of her family or friends thought she would live half that period. She was active in her habits of life, and, loving everything that was good and beautiful, she spent much time in the culture of flowers, in which she took great delight; and I doubt not the time spent among her flowers added many years to her life. She died of heart disease. She had had an attack, but recovered and was about the house again. On the morning of the thirteenth of April, 1875, she calmly announced to her daughter, who was in attendance on her: "Darling, I am dying; but don't grieve so for me." Perfectly composed and in her right mind, she stretched her feeble hands heavenward, and, gazing intently upward, said: "Come, Lord Jesus, come!" and without a struggle or a groan she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. James P. Magee, in Chambers county, Texas. She has left her family and the church a rich legacy in a well-spent life and a victorious death.

E. A. STOCKING.

DEPARTED this life, in the full assurance and triumphs of a living, evangelical and saving faith in the Lord Jesus, Miss MARTHA J. TAYLOR, aged twenty years, ten months and seven days.

The subject of this notice, Sister M. Taylor, was born in Randolph county, Ala., on the twenty-second day of January, 1854, and died in the town of Tallassee, Elmore county, Ala., on the twenty-ninth day of April, 1875.

Sister M. Taylor was converted last fall at the Cold Water camp meeting, and on her return to Tallassee from that meeting she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was a very consistent, pious, devoted Christian, and a worthy example of holy living to all her young companions and associates. She was raised by a very pious Christian mother, a member of the Baptist Church, who died in great peace and triumph, of consumption, in January, 1874.

Sister Mattie was attacked with that fatal scourge of our race—consumption—in December, 1874, and she continued to sink under the disease gradually until she was relieved from her sufferings by the cold embrace of death.

I visited her as her pastor in her early sickness, and continued to do so nearly every day, and frequently, in the latter part of the time, two, three and four times a day. When I first called on her I found her very calm and composed, her mind stayed on the blessed Jesus, filled with the peace of God and joy in the Holy Ghost, perfectly resigned to the divine will, whether to live or to die. In this frame of mind I always found her, during all her sickness, except in one solitary instance, a few days before the Lord took her home. I called to see her, and I found her very low and sinking fast to her end. I said to her: "Sister Mattie, it is a serious thing to die. You seem to be very weak and sinking. Do you find your way perfectly clear? Are there no clouds obstructing your passage?" She replied: "I don't know." This quite shocked me at the time; for always prior to this, in my pastoral visits, I had said: "It is a fearful thing to die;" when she would always reply: "Yes, I know it is a serious thing; but death has no terrors for me." I called back the same afternoon to see her, found her perfectly composed and tranquil, and I repeated to her what she had said in the morning. She was much astonished, and asked: "Did I say that? I have no recollection of having said it." Hence I saw that she was not exactly herself when making that remark. I said again to her: "It is a serious thing to die." She instantly replied: "Yes, I know it is a serious thing, but death has no terrors for me; for in passing through the gate on the other side of the river I shall shake hands with my dear mother."

I have been in the constant habit of visiting the sick and dying during my long labors in the ministry for fifty odd years; but among the many hundreds of cases which I have witnessed, of both old and young, I have never before seen such an instance of the perfect triumphs of an evangelical faith in the Lord Jesus as in the case of Sister Taylor. She was always calm and patient under her sufferings, never a murmur or complaint escaping her lips, but most perfectly resigned to the will of God, and ready to live or to die at all times. Ah! what will not Jesus do for those who love him, and walk in all his commandments blameless.

Oh, that all the young people were, in life and deportment, like dear Mattie Taylor!

M. C. TURRENTINE.

DR. JAMES M. SCAIFE died at Arizona, Claiborne parish, La., May 4, 1875. He was born in DeKalb county, Ga., February 28, 1820; was married to Sallie C. Blackman, in Harris county, Ga., March 4, 1848; embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1849, and removed to Claiborne parish, La., in January, 1850. He leaves a wife, a widowed mother, one brother, many relatives and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. His disease was consumption, with which he suffered for many years, but bore it all with patience, and died in great peace, leaving to his surviving friends the strongest testimony that he has gone to rest. Dr. Scaife was the kindest of husbands, and warm in his attachment to friends. He practiced medicine in Claiborne parish for twenty-four years, and was always ready to administer to the suffering, help the needy and comfort the bereaved. He will not soon be forgotten by those among whom he practiced. A man of untiring energy, failure in any undertaking seemed never to enter his mind. "What his hand found to do, he did it with his might."

When not professionally engaged his seat in the church was always filled. He was able in prayer, and ready at all times to speak words of comfort to those inquiring the way of salvation. The writer of this visited him the day before he died. During religious service all present seemed conscious of the divine presence. On this occasion he said: "If I am not prepared to die, I am the worst deceived man in the world." The community has lost a good physician, the church a liberal member, and his family their benefactor and their guide.

THOMAS R. MORGAN was born in South Carolina, February 15, 1797, and died in Butler county, Ala., May 23, 1875. He made a profession of his faith in Christ, and lived a consistent Christian in the Methodist Church for more than fifty years, and was at the time of his death the oldest member of Spring Hill church, of which he had been a member since its foundation in 1837. He was one of the five trustees to whom the land was deeded, and was the survivor of them all. Patillo, Brown and Collins had all preceded him to the better land; and now together they are resting beneath the sod near the church which their labors had consecrated to God.

He was a man of firm principle and decided judgment. Diligent in business, he had gathered much of this world's goods, but the war swept away most of his property. He was a man of peace, and the community in which he lived was blessed with an obliging neighbor. The past few years of his life were years of suffering. Old age was fast making impressions upon his mental faculties, and at times his mind would waver, and for a few weeks before his death he seemed unconscious of all things. He died peacefully.

His aged wife still waits her departure. May the same kind Savior give her his grace while she lives, and his presence when she dies.

DIED, at his residence in New Orleans, on the thirtieth of May, 1875, Mr. SAMUEL ALLISON, aged eighty-five years and four months. The subject of this notice was a native of the State of New York, where in early life he embraced religion and united with the Presbyterian Church. He subsequently lived in Texas, and a few years since removed to this city. About three years ago he joined the Cadiz Street charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was a man of great devotion, enjoyed much the privileges of the house of God, and was always found in his place when able to get there. He seems to have maintained a very even, consistent and blameless Christian character all through his protracted life. Having lived such a life, as might have been expected, he died the calm, hopeful death of the righteous, and evidently rests in Christ.

EX PASTOR.

ROBERT LEE, son of John Wesley and Mary Elizabeth Moore, died at his father's home, in Franklin parish, La., on the fourteenth of August, 1874, of congestion. He was born in Natchez, Adams county, Miss., June 3, 1864. He was a kind, dutiful son, and an affectionate brother. A short while before his death he said to his mother: "I am going to heaven."

CROSS-BEARING.

BY DR. H. BONAR.

I am crucified with Christ—
With Him nailed upon the tree;
Not Do cross, then, do I bear,
But the cross it beareth me,
Solemn cross it—which I died,
One with Him, the Crucified.

Shall I take that blood-stained cross,
Cross of agony and shame,
Cross of Him who fought my fight,
Cross of Him who overcame?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

Shall I drag thee through the crowd,
'Mid the laughter that is there;
Whirl thee through the giddy waltz,
Round upon my neck or hair?
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I make that lowly cross
Minister of woman's pride,
Drawing eyes to me that should
Fix upon the Crucified?
Awful cross of Calvary,
Shall I deck myself with thee?

Shall I call this glittering gem,
Made for show and vanity—
Shall I call this gaud a cross,
Cross of Him who died for me?
Shall I deck myself with thee,
Awful cross of Calvary?

The Unanswerable Argument.

The central and distinctive feature of the religion of Jesus Christ is found in its life-originating and life-sustaining power. He who spake as never man spake, said: "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, they are life." It is eminently noteworthy that our Lord did not present himself as a dialectician, expert in logical formulas and subtle in spinning verbal sumes for an opponent. He attempted no intellectual dalliance with skepticism, no theoretical disentanglement of any kind of error. His method was infinitely wiser—it was practical and personal. To Matthew, the publican tax-farmer, he went not with an elaborate demonstration of his divinity, but with the simple command: "Follow me." And by following him Matthew soon learned to look, out of heaven-born experience, upon Christ in his true character and mission. Christ's words obeyed wrought Matthew's regeneration; and now, as the result of that regeneration, the very being who in the beginning appeared probably as only a very remarkable man, shone out as the Wonderful, the Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Here, then, is the divine way of dealing with hardened and erring sinners. The argument that reaches them is practical. If they doubt, the remedy is given not in the form of hair-splitting distinctions and lofty word theories addressed to the speculative reason, but in precepts that require a change of purpose and conduct. And the precept is always life-inspiring. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." The only true test, therefore, of the truth, the divinity and the blessed results of Christianity lies in a practical application of its principles to our character and performance. Precisely as men decide upon the utility and value of a machine, not by a consideration of the ingenuity displayed in its construction, but by asking, "How does it work? what will it accomplish?" so Jesus invites them to make a personal trial of his doctrine, and to take its fruits in their renewed and uplifted life as the proper evidence of its origin and authority. Was there ever a method so simple, so satisfactory, so adapted to all minds and to every generation? There can be no room for doubt or failure here. Who questions the truth of the beatitude: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God?" Surely the first and only thing for him to do is to make himself pure, according to Christ's directions, and then, in the inevitable and consequent fact of seeing God and experiencing blessedness, he can no longer doubt; the darkness of skepticism vanishes from the heart thus irradiated with the glory of an indwelling shekinah.

To imitate Christ, then, in inducing lost men to practice the truth, is the one great task of the preacher, as it is also his only hope and the secret of his strength. He who can so touch hearts on Sunday as to influence them to carry the gospel rule of life into the secular transactions of Monday is a far better and more successful divine messenger than he who strives to entertain the curious with learned and nibelt eloquent disquisitions in reply to some errorist or other who is endeavoring to manufacture science into a weapon against the Bible. Tyndall made at Belfast an assault in the name of science on the spirituality of the soul and the existence of Deity. The latter part of this assault he has indeed recently retracted, or at least shown himself, happily, so inconsistent as to deny the logical conclusion of his own elaborately-proclaimed doctrine. But of the myriad answers that have already been uttered by the Christian press and pulpit to this assault, where are we to look for the one and infallible answer? Not, indeed, to any word-argument at all, but to the immense and wonderful revival that followed the practical preaching of God's truth to the people of Belfast immediately after the departure of Tyndall and his brother materialists. Verily God uses the weak things of this world to confound the mighty. Messrs. Moody and Sankey are illiterate, and, according to human vision, utterly unable to meet such mental and accomplished gladiators as Tyndall and Huxley. But Mr. Moody, in his simple way, unfolds and enforces everlasting and regenerative truth in the very place where science had just lifted her voice in pride and apparent triumph against it. And what is the result? Thousands are converted, and in their new and sanctified lives the truth is divinely vindicated. One breath of the Holy Ghost is more powerful than the entire host of the British Scientific Association. God's ways are not our ways. Let us, however, follow his ways, and have more unanswerable arguments.—Christian at Work.

The Brown Towel.

"They must be very poor who have nothing to give," said Mrs. Jarvis, as she deposited a pair of beautiful English blankets in a box that was being filled by the ladies of the church to be sent to the poor.

"And now, ladies, as you are nearly through, I would like to tell you an incident in my history. I was once very poor."

"You once very poor!" said a lady.

"Yes; I was once very poor. There came to our village a missionary to deliver a lecture. I felt very desirous to go; but, having no decent apparel to wear, I was often deprived of going to church, although I was a member.

"I waited until it was late, and then slipped in and took a seat behind the door.

"I listened with streaming eyes to the missionary's account of the destitution and darkness in heathen lands. Poor as I was, I felt it to be a great privilege to live in a Christian land, and to be able to read the Bible.

"It was proposed by our pastor that the congregation should fill a box and send it out with the missionary on his return.

"Oh! thought I, how I would like to send something. When I returned home my poor children were still sleeping soundly, and my disconsolate husband waiting my return; for he had been out of employment for some time. After he had gone to bed I went to looking over my clothes, but I could find nothing that was suitable that I could possibly spare; then I began looking over the children's things, but could find nothing that the poor dears could be deprived of; so I went to bed with a heavy heart, and lay a long time thinking of the destitution of the poor heathen, and how much better off I was.

"I got to thinking over my little stock again. There was nothing I could put into the box except one brown towel.

"Next day I got my towels, picked out the best one, and, when it was almost dark, put on my bonnet, went to the church, slipped my towel into the box, and came away thinking that the Lord knew that I had done what I could.

"And now, ladies, let me tell you it was not long after that till my husband got into a good situation, and prosperity has followed us ever since. So I date back my prosperity to this incident of the brown towel."

Her story was done, and as the carriage was waiting at the door she took her departure, leaving us all mute with surprise that one so rich and generous had been trained to give, amid poverty.—Christian Woman.

Elephants at Sea.

The hoisting into the air, and lowering elephants into the hold of a ship, is not only an unusual sight to most men, but also a strange experience to most elephants. They were lashed with strong ropes, slung as far as practicable in slings, hoisted up with cranes with threefold tackles, and lowered into the steamer's hold like bales of cotton. When in the hold they were placed in penfolds of strong teak-timber balks, bolted to the ship's side to prevent them from breaking loose. The fear the animals suffered was the only pain they underwent; and by watching the eyes of the poor beasts their terror was very manifest. Tears trickled down their mild countenances, and they roared with dread, more especially when being lowered into the hold, the bottom of which was sanded for them to stand upon. We are told that one timid female elephant actually fainted, and was brought to with a fan and many gallons of water. At sea it appears that the animals got into a curious habit of occasionally—evidently with a preconcerted signal—setting to work rocking the ship from side to side, by giving themselves, simultaneously, a swinging motion as they stood athwart the ship, the vessel rolling heavily as if in a seaway. This they would do for a spell of an hour or more, and then desist for several hours until the strange freak took them again. When they reached port they were hoisted out of the hold and swam on shore, thirty-five being thus safely landed without any accident whatever. When they were released from the slings it was a supreme moment for the mahout who was always on the elephant's neck from the time of its touching the water to letting go. As the word was given to let go, each of the elephants, either from the lightness of his heart at being freed from his floating prison, or from his own weight, we are not sure which—lightness of heart, like lightness of head, causes elephants and men to play pranks—plunged down deep into the water, the mahout on his neck. The anxiety on the face of the mahout, just one second before the plunge, was a study; so, too, was it when elephant and man rose to the surface again, the former blowing water from his trunk and the latter from his nose.—Calcutta Englishman.

Packages Forwarded Eight Miles in Two Seconds.

On Sunday, February 28, the pneumatic mail system was opened for public use in the city of Vienna, and for the few days of its working it appears to have been eminently satisfactory. By this method letters and packages not exceeding two ounces in weight can be sent from one end of the city to another—a distance of about eight miles—in something less than two seconds, so that, adding to this the time necessary for making up packages, assorting them, and delivering them, the whole is just about one hour. But this only covers extreme distances, and the managers of this system in Vienna say that in a short time the time between the receipt and delivery will be greatly reduced. In fact, between stations only two or three miles distant from each other, such packages are even now delivered within twenty minutes after being deposited. As the general postoffice in Vienna is also in the building of the general telegraph office, powerful steam engines are constantly at work compressing atmospheric air in a mammoth reservoir, from which the double system of cast-iron pipes, laid three feet under the surface of the streets, are fed. One system of pipes serves for carrying packages, and the other for pushing them ahead in the other direction. At the seven principal stations, in various parts of the city, similar engines are kept at work day and night drawing the air from the pipes, and creating a vacuum in front of the packages, which are thus more readily pressed forward by the expansive force of the compressed air behind them. The sixty sub-stations are connected not only with the two central offices, but also with each other by this double system of pipes. The dispatch of each package is announced by telegraph to the office to which it is sent, and to all intervening offices, to advise the latter not to stop it on its way. The pipes are six inches in diameter, with a perfectly smooth polished inner surface, and the packages are made up in India-rubber cylinders of various lengths. The postage on mail matter must be prepaid at the rate of two kreutzers (one cent) for each half ounce or fraction, which is evidently much cheaper than the two-cent postage for the city letters in this country.—This is the first instance of a large city—Vienna has about nine hundred thousand inhabitants—giving its people such facilities of correspondence at a moderate cost.—New York Mercury.

Carvosso's Experience.

1. Perfect love admits of a direct and satisfactory testimony from the Spirit as to the time when God accomplishes the great work within.

2. Faith alone is the condition and instrument of its application.

3. It does not make a man independent of the atonement; but, on the contrary, increases the believer's consciousness of its necessity and inestimable worth; inasmuch as the holiness of God, the purity and extent of the law, the sinfulness of sin, and the defects of our lives are better understood.

4. A present profession of enjoyment of the blessing is not responsible for failures past or to come. He that can now say, "In me verily is the love of God perfected," may have grieved the Spirit since he first knew this salvation by experience, and may again cast away his confidence and feel a return of the carnal mind; for he stands only one moment at a time, and that moment by a faith whose life depends on his constancy in watching unto prayer.

5. In the time of temptation, when the soul is stripped of the joyous witness of the blessing, it is our privilege and our duty to go at once to the atoning sacrifice and exercise a bold and firm reliance on Christ for present and full salvation, and this brings that blessed inward witness, the absence of which was a little before so sensibly felt.

6. When the believer has sustained a spiritual loss, and is conscious he has given way to sin, on the first perception of it he should humbly but instantly fly to the blood that makes the wounded whole, resting therein, and agonizing in prayer till the soul be again completely restored.

7. Although the enjoyment of perfect love does not admit of outward or inward sin, properly so called, yet it does admit of a strong conviction of the presence of numberless shortcomings and infirmities; and requires a vivid perception of the evil of fallen, unregenerate nature, the aggravation of actual sins that are past, and judgment for which they are continually calling, should we be found one moment separate from the atoning blood.

The Greenwich Observatory.

The Royal Observatory of Greenwich takes the lead, for its past labors as well as for its present position, over the other establishments of the same kind possessed by the English. It was founded in 1675. The interest of the marine was the controlling motive that determined the foundation of this establishment. The ordinance of 1673 decrees that "the astronomer royal shall devote his time to rectifying the tables of celestial bodies and the positions of the fixed stars in order to obtain the means of finding the longitude at sea." To indicate in a precise manner the position of the stars, to predict with certainty the course of the moon in relation to these fixed data, is the great work reserved for sedentary astronomy in the progressive improvement of the art of navigation. The heavens constitute, as it were, a revolving dial-plate, on which the moon, making her way from star to star, marks for the navigator the absolute time, the time at Greenwich, while the height of the sun above the horizon furnishes the time of the place where he chances to be, and it is by comparison that he finds out his longitude—that is, the meridian under which he is passing. The regular and long-continued observation of the fixed stars, sun and moon was then traditional in this illustrious establishment of Greenwich, which has had for directors such astronomers as Flamsteed, Halley, Bradley, Maskelyne, Pond, and George Biddell Airy, who has been director since 1835. It is there that the first foundation of modern astronomy has been laid—that is to say, the astronomy of precision. Far from seeking an easily obtained glory in the discoveries, more brilliant than really important, that strike the mind of the crowd, the Greenwich astronomers have invariably applied themselves to the laborious investigation of those minutiæ upon which the edifice of science reposes, and where often the trace of great unknown laws is revealed.—Emma M. Converse, in Popular Science Monthly.

HAVE the courage to acknowledge your ignorance rather than seek knowledge under false pretenses.

Religious Intelligence.

—The receipts of the American Bible Society for March reached the sum of $99,297.97; and the volumes issued were 63 390. The total receipts for the fiscal year ending March 31 were $577 569.80. The whole number of volumes issued for the year from the Bible House, not including those issued abroad, was 727,537.

—There is enormous industrial power in heathen lands. Much of it needs intelligent direction. The labor expended on the great wall of China, the grand canal, the walls of the cities, and the network of canals throughout the south and middle of the empire, would have been enough to construct all the railways of the world, tunnels, bridges and all.

—The Reformed Church (Dutch) complains that its receipts, especially for missionary purposes, have fallen off alarmingly, the receipts for December being smaller than were ever known before. The cause is the panic. When men begin to economize they seldom select their luxuries or their pastimes. They begin with a religious newspaper, the rental of their pews, and donations.

—The Fiji Islands, just become a colonial dependency of Great Britain, during the forty years they have been occupied as a missionary field by the English Wesleyans, have grown from the revolting cannibalism of 1835 to the following condition: The statistics of the Wesleyans are 1,414 schools, with 46,732 scholars, 1,000 places of worship, 109,250 hearers, and 224,413 consistent church members.

—According to statistics by the London Methodist, during the last half century Methodism in the agricultural districts of England is gaining on the population, and in almost a stagnant population, so far as increase goes, it has doubled its membership in fifty years. It says: "These facts should forever dissipate any fears that any one may have felt that we are losing our hold on country districts."

—May 4, for the first time in fifteen years, religious services were held in Pohick church, Fairfax county, Va. It was built in 1773, through the exertions of George Washington. During the late war it was occupied by Federal troops as a stable. It was very dilapidated, until within the past year some gentlemen of New York, learning of its condition and animated by a desire to preserve this old link which connects us with the past, had it rebuilt and refurnished in a substantial and handsome manner.

—The receipts of the American Home Missionary Society for December were $31,335. Of this sum $5 000 is from the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and $11 051 from the legacy of Mrs. H. E. H. Patton, of New Haven. We have the gratifying statement that no one of the home missionaries has been obliged to wait for his salary this winter. But then "grants have been cut down to the lowest figure," and an unusual amount has been received from legacies, which are a most uncertain resource.

—Social prayer meetings are held in different parts of Wurtemberg. At the beginning of the meeting each person takes a piece of numbered paper from the table. Number one prays first, and is followed by number two, and by others according to the numbers they have drawn. The object is to prevent embarrassment and a painful waiting one for another. There are many such gatherings found there. They form what are called the inner circles. The sexes do not meet, but women's prayer meetings are also held.

—The Rev. J. P. Cook, of France, writes to a friend in this city concerning the recent meetings for holiness in France: "I did not myself attend the meetings for holiness in Nimes. I know thousands attended them, with rather more than one hundred ministers of different denominations. The meetings lasted four days, and at one time, in the afternoon, four places of worship were opened and filled at the same time. I suppose hundreds were sanctified and as many perhaps converted. But there has been nothing very special in the services or in the preaching. It has simply been an outpouring of the Spirit, which, thank God, we have had of late in many other places, though not perhaps to such an extent—thus, at Montmeyron, Marsellies, Bourdeaux, Dieu le-fit, Nyons, Montauban, Die, and in Switzerland at Basle, Berne, Zurich, Geneva, Lausanne, etc. The Lord has sent down his Spirit, and never were the evangelical prospects of our continent more hopeful in this respect."—Methodist.

PROGRESS.—The Rev. B. Helm gives some striking instances of the success of the gospel in China, of which we only quote two: "Canton has long been noted as one of the most difficult fields in China. Whether or not this arises from that most unrighteous opium war of Great Britain, it is hard to say. But the naturally rugged disposition of the Cantonese has been long annoyed against foreigners and their religion. After thirty years' labor the Presbyterians only had a membership of forty-eight. But last year, in answer, in part no doubt, to special prayer, the Spirit was poured out and fifty-two were gathered in. A part of this blessing is owing to the faithful labors of a number of ladies among the women. In Fat Shan, a large market town west of Canton, a station was established a few years since by the native churches of Canton and Hong Kong. After a time rumors were started about Christians dropping magic pills in the wells, and a mob tore down the chapel. As they attacked it during the time of service, some of the Christians barely escaped with their lives. The heathen then piled rubbish on the lot, as they do on one where a fire has originated and burned down other houses, to prevent the owners rebuilding. But they were obliged eventually to indemnify the sufferers, who leveled off the heap and erected a chapel on a more conspicuous elevation. The church now numbers fifty members."

A SONG OF A NEST.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

There lives once a nest in the hollow
Drawn in the grasses and knit grass pressed,
Soft lined warm and full to the brim
Yet the nest never held in a summer quest
The bushes among.
Shall never I get on a prouder sight,
A fairer nestful the eye can know
A softer sound than their tender twitter,
That wind-like did come and go.

I had a nestful once of my own;
Ah! happy, happy I;
Right dearly I loved them; but when they were grown
They spread out their wings to fly;
Oh, one after one they flew away,
Far up the heavenly blue,
To the better country, the upper day,
And—I wish I was going too.

I pray you, what is the nest to me,
My empty nest?
And what is the shore where I stood to see
My boat sail down to the west?
Can I call that home where I sighed so yet,
Though my good man has sailed?
Can I call that home where my nest was set,
Now all hopes have failed?

Nay, but the port where my sailor went,
And the land where my treasure lies,
There is the home where my thoughts are sent,
The only home for me.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 10.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: You know I have been "under the weather," as the sailors call it, for a few days, and hence had to forego the pleasure of our evening chats. I tried to get Tom to write a letter in my place, and he got along pretty well. I have his copy here. You see I told him that now we had got all the toads and frogs and rats and mice cleared up, I thought we had better go right to work at once on "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Tom has heard the story before, and could have told it, I suspect, better than I can; but Tom said: "Why, grandpa, we must tell them first about the Bees and Hornets, and Wasps and Bumble-bees, and all the other Hymenoptera." So I told Tom he could just go and write out an account of them, and if he would try hard to make an interesting story of it I would read it to you. I charged him particularly to leave out all the long words. Here is

TOM'S STORY.

"The Hymenoptera resemble the Neuroptera in the membranous character of their four wings, though the posterior wings are usually smaller than the anterior, and the nervures are fewer in number and are not as closely ramified as in the Neuroptera. Although the Hymenoptera are mandibulate insects, yet they imbibe their nourishment by suction. They are also provided with an ovipositor as well as a sting, and undergo a complete metamorphosis. This order is divided into two sections—the Terebrantia and the Aculeata. The former section is again divided into the Phytiphaga and the Entomophaga; while the latter section is also divided into the Predones and the Mellifera."

When Tom had got this far he brought it to me to read, and as I didn't feel well enough to pass judgment on it I told him to call in Charlie and read it to him, and if he could understand it I would agree that it was all right. Tom looked as though he didn't like this test very much, but he went out in the "live oak grove," where he found Charlie playing "house-building" with some blocks I had given him, and he read him his piece, or as much of it as he had finished, and then he came back to me with a black spot just over his eye, where, he said, Charlie had hit him with one of his blocks. Tom said Charlie would not even let him finish reading the piece, but burst out with:

"Tall that a 'tory, Tom? It's all 'tall." And when Tom kept on reading he commenced pelting him with his blocks. So I told Tom he must explain all the long words, or I couldn't adopt his piece; and after awhile he came back with this:

"Hymenoptera means 'membranous winged;' Neuroptera means 'nerved winged;' Terebrantia means 'borers;' Aculeata means 'having a sting;' Phytiphaga means 'feeding on vegetables;' Entomophaga means 'feeding on insects;' Predones means 'robbers,' and Mellifera means 'producing honey.'"

I told Tom that somehow his explanation didn't seem to me to clear the matter up much; but he insisted that it was as clear as his natural history, and then I thought perhaps it would be a good idea to have children write books so as to see if we couldn't leave out the long words, and I sent for Harry and told him to sit down by my table and write down all he knew about bees. So Harry put the medicine bottles one side, and got some paper and a pencil, and this is what Harry wrote:

CONCERNING BEES.

"Bees are little insects with long stings in their tails. Bees sting boys if they poke them with sticks. There are black bees and yellow bees and bumble-bees. Hornets ain't bees, neither are wasps. When a bee stings a man he has to die (I mean the bee;) but a yellow-jacket can keep on stinging five or six times. Bees make honey; wasps don't. Honey is good. I'd rather be a bee than a wasp. This is all I know about bees."

I thought, as I was not able to talk much, I would just give you these two stories by Tom and Harry, and see which one you like the better.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Young Friends.

MOBILE, June 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: If my letter to Grandpa Goodale is not too long, and it will not trouble you, please print it in your paper, or give it to Grandpa Goodale for me, please.

Auntie wrote the letter for me, but I told her what to say. I am a little fellow just seven years old, and I cannot write very good yet.

I wish you lived in Mobile, so that I could go to see you. I love you because you print such pretty stories for us little folks.

Your friend, WILLIE OTIS.

FOR GRANDPA GOODALE.

MOBILE, June 1, 1875.

DEAR GRANDPA GOODALE: I was thinking about writing to you when that letter from Florence came out. Then I said: "I am glad that I did not write, for he will mind a little girl quicker than he will a little boy." I do not know why, but everybody minds girls better than they do boys. I have a little brother four years old, and a little sister three years old, and mamma makes us boys give up to her in everything.

Since Florence wrote several little boys and girls have written, and I think it is all Tom's fault that we have not heard about "Barney and the Bays' Nest" long ago.

I like frog stories and rat stories and mice stories, but I do not like Tom's stories. I do not understand the hard names he calls them. Auntie does. She has a heap of curious things in the parlor. She has given me a little sea-horse for Tom. I will send it in a letter if he will promise not to talk next time, but let you tell us about "Barney and the Bays' Nest." How old is Tom?

Your little friend,
WILLIE OTIS.

WOODLAND, CLAIBORNE PARISH, LA., June 4, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I think my time has come round to write to you to let you know how I appreciate your ADVOCATE, and especially your interesting stories in the Child's Corner. I am a little girl—just entered my ninth year. I have only one brother and one dear sister. Mamma teaches me at home. I get my Sunday school lessons, and then I study my Third Reader, arithmetic and spelling. Mamma reads to me, and helps me read the ADVOCATE mostly of nights and Sunday evenings. I help mamma do most of her house work. We have just gotten home from Sunday school. Father is our superintendent, and mamma is our teacher. I do love singing, and we have it every Sunday. We are needing some song-books very much. By some unknown cause we failed to get our song-books after the children had thrown in money enough to buy them. Bro. Kimball preached for us to-day, and had a great deal to say about the little folks; said that he had been trying to serve God ever since he was ten years old. I do love to hear him preach. Our circuit preacher, Bro. Manley, is a blind man, and one of the best preachers I ever heard. He comes to see us frequently, and oh! what good prayers he can pray. I will never forget him. Our home has always been a home for the preachers. I fear I will weary your patience by writing so much, but I must say a little about the Grandpa Goodale stories. They are all interesting, but I am gratified to learn so much about the mole; and especially to learn that they are of some benefit, for I have always considered them very destructive. I hope to learn more about the singing mice in our next week's paper. How delighted I would be to hear from you, Mr. Editor. I love to read your paper. Good-by.

Your little friend,
MARY HUNTER LANE.

P. S.—I live ten miles from Homer and twelve from Minden.

FORT SMITH, ARK., May 31, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: As so many little girls and boys are writing to you, I thought I would write again. Is Grandpa Goodale going to write any more? His stories are very interesting. I wish he would tell his story of "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Master Tom's talks are very interesting, and have a great deal of information in them, but if he would use words that we little ones could understand it would be better; but then he explains them afterward, and that makes it all right. I liked the piece entitled "Ants" very much. Well, I will close.

I am your little friend,
ANNIE GRANADE.

P. S.—I hope Grandpa Goodale will continue to write his letters.

ANNIE.

The Bible at Home.

With many Bible-reading is a mere service, gone through with as something that cannot be omitted with a good conscience, but at the same time with no real pleasure. It is more as a penance than a privilege, and kept up with the superstitious notion that there is a mysterious virtue in it, whether the word be understood or not. The Scriptures are read hurriedly, when half asleep, and with but little attention to the meaning. Then they are not read with much regard to the order and connection, dipped into here and there, and slurred over in the most careless and irreverent way. The whole Bible has been read regularly through by comparatively few Christians of mature years. Many of them will die having no acquaintance whatever with some of the books of the inspired volume. Their reading has been confined mainly to the Psalms and the Gospels, and perhaps of these they have no very accurate knowledge. God's book was given us to be read. Some parts are more important and edifying than others, but every part is worth attention, and none should be neglected. It should be gone through in regular course, from Genesis to Revelation. Portions adapted to our immediate condition and wants should be selected as occasion arises, but the habit of reading the Bible regularly through should be maintained.

A reference Bible is always the best, and, in reading, the passages referred to should be examined with care. Comparing Scripture with Scripture is always profitable, and sometimes absolutely necessary to bring out the meaning. Every Bible reader should have a good commentary at hand, and a concordance also, and not be too indolent to use them. The commentary especially is a necessity if we would understand the sacred writings. Much, doubtless, can be understood without them—enough, perhaps, for the salvation of the soul, and for the practical purposes of a godly life; but the reader loses a great deal, and misses the import of many rich passages, if he seeks no assistance from them. A thorough, accurate and intelligent understanding of the Bible is simply impossible to the ordinary reader, or to almost any reader, without a commentary. No devout and earnest Christian should be satisfied to forego the possession and industrious use of one. Every family ought to be supplied with a work of the sort. Otherwise there will not be much enlightened study of the Holy Scriptures. Next to the Bible itself is a judicious commentary.

The Bible should not be merely read—it should be studied, meditated on, and searched in a prayerful spirit. In general, we imagine Christians take too little pains in this matter, and that they devote too little time to it. Other books have usurped the place of the book, and newspapers, magazines and novels leave but a fragment of time for the word of God. It is a busy age, and many are occupied over-much with the affairs of life. Remember, however, that the busiest must die, and that the treatment of God's book will be brought up in the judgment. The Bible is entitled to our greatest care; it must be first not only in our reverence, but in our actual use. Our observation is that the members of our churches, in the main, are culpably ignorant of their Bibles. They do not read them enough, and they do not use the notes and commentaries as studiously as they should. To read a chapter occasionally for conscience' sake, and to depend for the rest upon what we may hear from the pulpit, is to treat the book with criminal neglect. Really spiritual people love the Scriptures. Their delight is in the law of the Lord, and in it they meditate day and night. The Scriptures are more to be desired than gold, and they are "sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb." But this taste for Bible-reading—this appetite for it, this hearty satisfaction and delight in it—how rare it is.

Surely, if the word is precious, it will be read through and through, and no trivial circumstances will be allowed to divert us from the habitual and devout study. Sir Walter Scott, when dying, called for a book to be read, and, when asked what book, replied: "There is but one book." Happy if in life, youth and health we could find this out that there is pre-eminently for us but one book. Let us not wait till the dying hour to give it its rightful place or to learn its infinite value.

What we write now is for Christians in their private home-life. How are you treating the Bible, how much do you read it, how much do you know of it and about it? We like to see Bibles about the house well worn, showing use, and with the signs of wear on the binding and gilding, and the pages opening with facility almost anywhere. Every one should have his own Bible, and be familiar with the location of its chapters and paragraphs. A neighbor's house may be just like ours, but we are more at home in our own. There are margins, fly-leaves and marks that we appropriate, and the volume comes at length to have a history and many blessed associations. It is an old traveling companion, it has witnessed many trying ordeals in our lives; there are upon its pages the stain of storms and shipwreck, and the print of tears.

But the main thing is to read it understandingly. "Understandest thou what thou readest?" Do not pass over a verse without letting this question have its full force. Determine to find out the mind of the Spirit as far as possible, and bring all your thoughts to bear upon the words under your eye. A little self-examination will probably expose our ignorance and carelessness, and show how unworthily we have handled the word of life.

The reading will be a means of deepening piety, and the soul will be fed as it can be fed nowhere else. Without familiarity with the Bible the Christian cannot pray to much purpose, nor can he get the largest benefits from the preaching and ordinances of God's house. To be eminently useful, to have a uniform and stable experience, and to be truly happy in our religion, we must see to it that the word of Christ dwells richly in us. To stand and to be panoplied for the holy war, first of all the loins must be girt about with truth. To young Christians and to the old, to all who would keep themselves in the love of God, and persevere till the crown is gained, Bible-reading is of first importance. There can be no permanent, vigorous, growing spiritual life without it.

Revival Expedients.

The fact that the churches are deeply exercised on the question of saving the people is a most hopeful sign. It is a token for good that they are casting about for means to reach those who have drifted away from their pales, and those who have never been brought within the immediate range of gospel influences. It must not, however, be concluded that the regular preaching and the usual organizations are failures. The basis of all is the church, with its ministry, Sunday schools, and its trained and disciplined agencies. Let it be remembered that the lay evangelists, the missionaries, and all extraordinary movements issue from this center, flowing from it as from a fountain, and deriving their vigor and power from this great reserve of material support and spiritual force. The work of evangelists would not exist but for the churches, and the immediate fruits of their labor are greatly owing to the seed already sown by others. The results would not be permanent if there were no pastoral care and no organizations for the instruction and oversight of those who have been awakened and converted.

The expedients resorted to cast no unfavorable reflection upon the old and tried methods of conserving and spreading the truth. Solid and doctrinal preaching to comparatively small congregations, pastoral visiting, and the careful instruction of the children, are as much as ever a necessity. Whatever may be effected by novel ways—by peculiar modes of presenting the gospel, by singing and anecdotes, and tact in the manipulation of various means—there will always be need for the patient laborer, and for those who work steadily in the old-time way. Many are doubtless tempted to ask: "What is the use of preparing and preaching sermons, and of going through all the painstaking toil of the average pastor, when such men as Hammond, Moody and Varley so far outstrip them in attracting and saving the people?" Their ministry is necessarily transient in its operations, passing rapidly from one field to another. It is not likely that their measures in any one place would command unabated interest if continued year after year. Their ministry is also incomplete, directed almost exclusively to the awakening and conversion of sinners, while the work of edification—the training and maturing of Christian character—is necessarily left to others. Pastoral care and church discipline are needed to secure and perfect the fruits. Without these the results would be almost as inappreciable and evanescent as the morning dew.

They are not displacing nor doing the work of the regular ministry. Their expedients, however valuable for their special object, may not be as good for all purposes as those with which we are familiar. It is not unlikely that they would prove less enduring and effective in the long run. Our camp meetings are exceedingly useful in arresting popular attention, in awakening sinners and in quickening the spirituality of believers; but they are accessory and supplemental as related to our regular church work. The expedients for the awakening of sinners are attended by preaching specially adapted to the unconverted. Let us not fall into the habit of directing our efforts too exclusively in this one channel. The precepts and doctrines of the gospel are very largely addressed to Christians, and no inconsiderable part of the pastor's business is to feed the Savior's sheep. Preachers must not neglect to feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers. Christ's commission to Peter was: "Feed my lambs, feed my sheep." The life of the church must be nourished and kept up. In our reaching out after the aliens we must at the same time give due attention to the household of faith. Under too much preaching to the unconverted the church grows cold, and by our very attempts to raise the dead the living are killed. Warning and teaching go together, and in no other way can we present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. The most direct road to a revival of awakening power is through a deeper work of grace in the church. A vigorous and healthy life here is sure to make itself felt in the conversion of souls. The wise housewife looks to the quality of her leaven as well as to the manner of its use. More spiritual preaching, the presentation and enforcement of personal consecration, and the necessity of holiness and communion with God, are needed.

It is a great mercy to a community already well stocked with churches, Sunday schools and preachers, for some flaming evangelist to come along with new and peculiar methods to stir the people and to draw them to Christ. But are we to depend upon these means? Cannot every preacher save souls, and cannot every church have salt in itself? But few men can handle the popular expedients which are so effective in the hands of Moody and Sankey. They cannot tell anecdotes, they cannot sing much, they have not the wonderful tact, the histrionic art. Some are no doubt endowed and called to a special work, but surely every devoted man may be wise to win souls, and every church may be the source and center of saving power. Churches and the religious people of a community, wondering at the success of certain revivalists, may be waiting for them, and underrate their own means for awakening religious concern among the people. God is not dependent upon any class of measures or agents, and if we have the spirituality and the faith his abundant blessings will be showered upon us.

With all let us not lose sight of the fact that the measures of the modern evangelists are very much after the old Methodist way. Our field preaching, experience meetings, assurance, sudden conversions, direct and pungent appeal, the offer of a present salvation, and going out after the common people, are the things once roundly condemned but now being taken up by the churches. We should be careful to keep up the primitive fire, and by all means hold on to the methods which have been so effective throughout our history. Revivals are going on in various quarters of our Southern Church—in Virginia and Georgia especially—of remarkable power. The whole Christian world is exercised and expectant. It is a time to look for a general refreshing. All our resources of prayer, all our efforts as Christians, all tried and lawful expedients should now be brought to bear upon the great work of arousing the world and of seeking a Pentecostal baptism.

A Way of Doing Good.

The ADVOCATE costs the subscriber about five cents a week—a trifle less than this. This is a small sum for the amount of reading-matter furnished. There is nothing in the shape of tracts or other literature as cheap as this. We doubt whether the amount could be expended in a way to do more good. There are few who are not able to pay for a paper if they really want it, but there are some. A generous man, having the means, could confer a lasting benefit upon the poor by paying the subscriptions of a certain number annually, or by remitting to the publisher a sum for the purpose. In every community and congregation are individuals and families in indigent circumstances to whom the ADVOCATE would be a valued gift. To intelligent and benevolent persons here is an open door. Are there no poor widows, no families in straitened circumstances, no worthy young people struggling for a living within your knowledge, to whom you may send the paper? If none of this sort, there may be those little interested in religion, and with no taste for reading, to whom an ADVOCATE sent might be the means of awakening an interest in religious matters, and perhaps in leading them to Christ. Once introduced, in many cases those hitherto indifferent would learn to prize and love the paper, and continue it at their own expense.

With our observation of the benefits of religious newspapers, and our knowledge of the fact that scarcely one-half of our church members ever see one, if we had the means we should give freely in this direction. We know of no form of beneficence that promises more for the general welfare, or that is likely to tell more upon the prosperity of the church. Our friends who have the ability should avail themselves of this means of usefulness. Send the paper to your children, to distant kindred, and to the poor of the church, and to your neighbors who might be benefited by its weekly visits. Some time ago we gave an extract from a letter written by a widow lady about her subscription. That was only a specimen. The writer represents a considerable class of those who want the ADVOCATE, and who are hard pressed to spare the money to pay for it. Referring to that letter, a brother who enjoys doing a kind act, and is ever looking for the occasion of a benevolent deed, writes as follows:

PROVIDENCE, LA., June 3, 1875.

DEAR BRO. HARP: I read in your issue of the twenty-seventh: "My youngest little boy said: 'Mamma, don't do that, but write to him that you have three boys who are large enough to work, and they will pay it (for the ADVOCATE) if he will continue the paper. We can't do without it.'"

Stop that paper, Bro. Harp? Never! God bless those pious, noble boys and their precious mother! Send them the ADVOCATE, and send the bill to me for payment.

Yours fraternally,

M. DUBOSE.

Job says: "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." The blessing of that widowed mother and her orphan children will come upon the considerate friend who has come forward for their relief. We had determined that the paper should go. Now there is no doubt about it.

A Word for Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Your indorsement of the new departure of the Western Methodist, to encourage immigration instead of emigration, is hailed with strange delight. Texas, California, Oregon and the Territories have had such voluble championship that no one could get a word in, or had the temerity to try an editor's patience on a claim for the old States.

Let me, before this unexpected tide retreats, put in a word for Mississippi, for the territory included in the Jackson district—Hinds, Madison, Yazoo and Leake counties. The agricultural capacities and resources of this section of the State are known to few outside of these counties. The soil and climate favor the cultivation of the entire vegetable and floral and fruit production of the temperate zone.

Here are wheat, oats, corn, cotton, rice, cane and tobacco in close juxtaposition. The Irish and sweet potatoes, turnips, carrots, cabbage, beats and parsnips grow to perfection. The peach, the pear and the apple—the glory of the world of their kind—are produced here. By the middle of May we have the Irish potato and all the vegetables of the garden for the table. The oat and the wheat crop is taken in in May, and much of the corn is "laid by" in June. We have the range of the fruit crop until October. The same labor and skill employed here will yield a greater variety and supply for domestic use, and a larger cash product for the market, than any country in the world. This I say with maps and statistics before me. The price of lands is within the reach of every able-bodied man who can make a hand on a farm. A large country is open and waiting population. The owners will sell and make terms easy—as easy as industrious and thrifty people will ask or need. The health condition cannot be surpassed. The mortality list will compare favorably with the choicest parts of the earth, and in those spots where the life risks are greatest the products of the soil are fabulous. A sight of the growing crops of this section at this moment would be more persuasive to immigration than any description of the country. A white population is wanted, and would be welcomed from any part of the world. Facilities for schools or churches are as ample as an enterprising people can ask to start with. Everything is open to improvement. Nothing exists here but will yield to the spirit of progress. From Canton to McComb City, on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, a live man can find a good settlement, either for a city garden, for fruit, vineyard or a farm. With a good solid, industrious white population a man could not make a superior choice to Mississippi in the world. Very truly,

W. E. M. LINFIELD.

An Interesting Letter.

MR. EDITOR: Mrs. F. A. Butler, of Knoxville, has presented to the Historical Society of the Holston Conference a number of interesting letters found among the papers of her father, Rev. Thomas Stringfield. Among them is one addressed to her grandfather, Rev. Thomas Wilkerson, written by Bishop Asbury at Baltimore, Md., in 1806. I send you a copy for publication in your paper, as I suppose it will interest many of your readers. It is genuine—full of the spirit of the man and the Methodism of his time. Yours, etc.,

W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., May 10, 1875.

BALTIMORE, March 13, 1806.

MY DEARLY BELOVED THOMAS: We have no greater joy of a social nature than to hear that our children walk in truth. The presiding elders have a great charge—they are the eyes, the ears, the hands, of the Conference and superintendency; and the guardians of good order among the preachers and the people. We have had great seasons at all our Conferences. Harmony, order and increase are the prominent features of each. We have added 37 preachers, but we have a drawback by locations; 4,176 increase in the three Conferences; 100 if not 200 souls under operation in Norfolk and Portsmouth. Every district and circuit rising. We have great things in Delaware district; some think 5,000 have been added in the course of the year. Camp meetings carried to the highest tone of good order and success. We have a circular letter from Dr. Coke; he wishes the yearly Conferences to act upon his coming to reside or not in America, with me, or at my death or debility. If with me, to divide the Conferences, and take them by turns. It is a proper plan. We have a complete life of Fletcher, Wesley's improved, from our press; if you have them, well; if not, the sooner you get them the better. Fletcher himself is the portrait. Bro. Cooper's here; he says Mr. Wesley's notes, in two volumes, on the New Testament will soon be ready. We or Bro. Neal shall possibly print Hawe's Church History, the greatest defense of Methodism in America, without the author's design or knowledge of our plan. He sufficiently proves to my satisfaction that we have been formed on the apostolical plan. Take me right—that no church, ancient or modern, has copied so near primitive days. I have had great weakness in my eyes. I can only write one short letter in a day. I am, as ever, thine.

F. ASBURY.

Holston Methodist.

MRS. MARY LOUISE LIGON, daughter of our friend, Dr. W. G. Austin, died at the residence of her parents, in this city, on Tuesday, June 15. Mrs. Ligon was an exemplary member of the Methodist Church from her childhood, and a devoted Christian. Her end was peace. She sleeps in Jesus.

A Good Resolve.

A devoted layman of Mississippi in the following note tells us of his purpose to work for the ADVOCATE. We trust that many others will be of like mind, and help to extend our circulation. Much can be done by our brethren if they will give a little time and effort to the work. It is a work of piety and benevolence, and the fruits will be great and lasting. Get the people to reading, and a taste will be created and a habit formed productive of manifold benefits. Our subscription ought to be doubled in every community. It can be with such effort as our preachers and laymen are capable of making.

AT HOME, June 6, 1875.

REV. L. PARKER—Dear Brother: Since writing the within to Bro. Harp, being kept from church by rain, I have read the last number of our paper (June 3,) and take this method of expressing my thanks to you for the edification and good received. I am astonished that your paper has not a wider circulation. I have been advancing its claims, but find members spending money for whisky, tobacco and secular papers too poor to take it. What sort of Christians are they? Please send me five or ten numbers of the above date, and I will put forth a Herculean effort at our next quarterly meeting. Your brother in Christ,

T. G. MOORE.

DR. WHEELER, the new editor of the Methodist, has this suggestive paragraph for his contributors and correspondents:

We are receiving communications with requests to publish "the whole just as it is." Now there are very few articles that we can use in that way. This paper is not as big as all outdoors, and the editor must pick and choose according to his judgment. It often happens that part of an article is timely and "in our line," while the rest is either useless or less valuable than something else. We have had about twenty years of practice in cutting "the best passages" out of college orations, and we expect that the very finest points in our correspondents' letters will perish under our remorseless pencil. We mean to be fair and just in the use of material, but please keep anything you have that is too precious to be submitted to our judgment for such use as you may think best.

LONDON METROPOLITAN CHAPEL BUILDING FUND.—The annual meeting in behalf of this fund was held in City Road chapel, London, May 9. Mayor Firth, of Sheffield, an esteemed layman of another branch of the Methodist family, presided. Rev Gervase Smith read a record which showed that since its establishment, in 1861, forty-four new chapels, with 41,000 sittings, have been erected by its aid. The report also showed that since the commencement of the fund more than seventy smaller places of worship, including school-rooms, iron chapels and halls, providing 15,634 sittings, have been built or hired independently of the fund; so that increased accommodations to the extent of 56,642 sittings have been secured in the metropolitan districts during the last twelve years.

"THE POOR POPE."—There are in Italy 240 Roman Catholic bishops, in addition to an interminable list of other official ecclesiastics. According to the Voce della Verita, a reliable authority, 120 of these have directly received aid from the Pope during the past year. The amount allowed to each was about 6,000 francs, or a total of over 600,000 francs per annum. How much is directly contributed from the papal treasury to the support of other church functionaries is not stated. Verily, it pays the Romish ecclesiastics to keep up in the ears of Bridget and others in this country the cry of poverty and persecution. Well may Pius the Ninth favor the church in the United States with a cardinal's hat.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held in Exeter Hall, London, May 5. The Archbishop of Canterbury presided. Addresses were made by the chairman, by Earl Fortescue and Dr. W. M. Punshon. Mr. Spurgeon also made a brilliant speech, as did also Dr. Lachlin Taylor, of Canada. The reports showed that the receipts from ordinary sources for the year ending March 31 amounted to the sum of £222,062, £102,968 being receipts for Bibles and Testaments. Total net receipts, £222,191 5s. 6d.; total net payments, £217,390 13s. 1d. The total issues of the society now amounted to 73,750,538 copies.

REV. JOEL T. DAVES left for Mexico on Saturday, the fifth instant. His address is City of Mexico. He left in good health, and expects that the improvements on our church in the City of Mexico will be completed in a few weeks. It will be a handsomely-finished and commodious building, with a spacious audience-room, and conveniences for a school.

DEATH OF A MINISTER.—We have just heard, says the Southern Christian Advocate, of the death of Rev. James Spence, a superannuate of the South Georgia Conference. He had been in failing health for a year or more, and his release from suffering was not unexpected. We have received no particulars of his last hours, but presume a suitable obituary notice will be furnished us.

WOE to falsehood! It affords no relief to the breast, like truth; it gives us no comfort, pains him who forges it, and, like an arrow directed by a god, flies back and wounds the archer.—Goethe.

Books and Periodicals.

GOD'S WORD THROUGH PREACHING. The Lyman Beecher lectures before the Theological Department of Yale College. By John Hall, D. D. New York: Dodd & Mead, publishers.

The volume contains ten lectures and an appendix. The treatment is comprehensive but not exhaustive. The style is clear and simple, and the method excellent. Dr. Hall's good common sense is apparent in nearly every line. He begins with the church, shows the relation of the ministry to it, and enlarges upon the work of the pastorate. He believes strongly in pastoral visiting, and shows that mingling with the people is helpful and even necessary to profitable preaching. He advocates expository preaching, keeping to the text, and gives his testimony in favor of preaching without the manuscript. He recommends a brief written preparation, but the delivery is not to be memoriter in any accurate or burdensome degree. The point of emphasis is fidelity to the word of God—the mind of the Spirit exhibited and applied to the understanding and conscience. We have found the work exceedingly suggestive and instructive. To young preachers especially it will prove a valuable assistant, in the pastorate and the pulpit. For sale by R. G. Eyrich, New Orleans.

CONDITIONS OF SUCCESS IN PREACHING WITHOUT NOTES. By Richard S. Storrs, D. D., LL. D. Dodd & Mead, New York, 1875.

This volume contains three lectures delivered before the students of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, in January last. Dr. Storrs draws largely upon his own experience, and tells how, after many years of struggle, he became emancipated from the manuscript. He gives his method of preparation—brief notes—and the delivery with memory unburdened, and the mind left free to the inspiration of the occasion, and the unfolding of the subject under the quickening influences of telling the gospel message to dying men. With very meager written preparation—the barest outline—his plan is to fill himself with his subject, and then to pour out the results in words that come as they are wanted. He is particularly explicit in his disapproval of memorizing sermons. The memory must not be overtaxed, as the effort to recollect paralyzes and weakens the action of the other faculties, and leads to a loss of power only less than reading. The conditions of success are stated clearly—care of the health, mental discipline, and, above all, spirituality. His plan, all in all, is that which most Methodist preachers, especially those of an early day, have always followed. Dr. Storrs' lectures are not as comprehensive as those of Dr. Hall, as he proposes to cover only the ground indicated in their title; but on this particular point of preaching without notes he brings in much valuable accessory material. It is a work of great utility, and we have found it both entertaining and instructive. Dr. Storrs is an eminent and successful preacher, and he tells in these three lectures what he has gained from a long experience. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

THE American Agriculturist for June is replete with useful information, and copiously illustrated.

QUICKEST TIME TO NEW YORK.—The time for summer travel is at hand. Hundreds of our citizens will leave in the next few weeks to visit the East and North on business or pleasure. In this connection we would direct attention to the Louisville, Pan Handle and Pennsylvania railroad route, under the new short-time schedule.

Should passengers wish to loiter on the way, this route offers rich attractions—the Mammoth Cave, the various watering-places in Ohio, the mountain retreats in Pennsylvania; and the Pennsylvania railroad has convenient connections with all the Atlantic watering-places. Double track stone ballasted roads, iron bridges and every precaution against danger, as well as every protection from dust and exposure that is practicable. Those wishing to press through will save time and money by this route.

NEW ORLEANS AND TEXAS RAILROAD.—Mr. C. H. Allen, the general manager of the above road, has lately put several new coaches on this line, and we are informed by those who have passed over the road that it is in fine condition to Donaldsonville. The ride up the coast, through orange groves and sugar plantations, is very delightful. See advertisement.

THOSE going to New York are referred to the card of the Hoffman House on this page. This hotel is situated on Madison square, and is convenient to the business portion of the city. All guests are assured of polite attention from Mr. G. R. Read, the proprietor.

GUMMING SAWS.—Millers and others using circular saws will do well to observe the card, in another column, of William Clelland, who has an establishment at 222 Magazine street for the purpose of straightening and gumming circular saws.

MRS. OHER, 123 Poydras street, will do fine dressmaking and ordinary work at reasonable prices.

HOW TO STOP YOUR PAPER.

At the earnest request of a large number of agents and subscribers not to discontinue the paper without notice, and the assurance that, though they did not always have the amount at the time the year closed, they would pay up when they could, we were led to give notice to our agents and subscribers, about five years ago, that "no paper would be stopped without an explicit order." Since that time the fact has been well known to all subscribers, except such as may have paid always before the end of the year, that the paper was continued unless otherwise ordered. Our agents have taken subscriptions with this knowledge.

If a subscriber wishes to stop his paper, do not direct the postmaster to return your paper. That will not stop it. Do not write upon it and return it yourself. That lays you liable to a fine. There are three ways to stop it: 1. When you subscribe state that you wish the paper to stop at the expiration of the time paid for. 2. If you did not so expressly order, send a postal card to reach us any time before the expiration. 3. If you have neglected these two simple methods, and the time to which you have paid is past, send a letter inclosing pay for the time since your subscription expired, at the rate of twenty-five cents a month. If your paper does not stop promptly thereupon you may be assured your letter has been miscarried.

We never fail to discontinue when the order to do so reaches us. Postmasters not unfrequently give notice to stop papers, heading the notice "Second" or "third notice," when, on referring to our files, we find that no previous notice ever reached us from them. But postmasters have been in many instances mistaken, and stopped papers contrary to the wishes of subscribers. Attend to it yourself if you want it done, and if it don't stop it is because your letter did not come to hand.

LOOK AT THE LETTER LIST.

Correspondents are requested to look for the acknowledgment of their letters and remittances in the letter list, and if, after a sufficient time has elapsed, they do not find them acknowledged in the proper place, to advise us. All business letters are acknowledged. The publisher opens the mails himself and makes up the list for the letter column before any other entries are made. By examining these lists we can ascertain the number of letters and remittances from each correspondent for the past four years.

We find lately that the failure of the letters of agents and subscribers to reach us has been the cause of many misunderstandings in accounts, but we cannot be held responsible unless notified in a reasonable time.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.—Gov. John McEnery has entered into a copartnership with T. C. W. Ellis and E. John Ellis as attorneys at law. Those gentlemen are well known throughout the State, and their talents will command respect and patronage. Gov. McEnery is a man of strong character and sterling integrity, and will be found reliable and worthy of confidence by any who may intrust their business to his hands. Their office is at 56 Camp street.

NOW THAT the heated season has arrived there is nothing so pleasant as a ride to the lake over the Pontchartrain railroad. Those who have not been there are advised to go without delay. Mr. C. H. Allen is the manager of this road.

H. B. STEVENS & Co., the popular clothiers on Canal street, have reduced their prices to suit the times. At their store everything in the clothing or gentlemen's furnishing goods can be found. See advertisement.

SASH, BLIND AND DOOR FACTORY. The steam sash, blind and door factory of Messrs. Roberts & Co., located at 301 to 307 Gravier street, has an enviable reputation for fine and faithful work. The proprietors are deservedly classed among our best and most worthy business men, and their resources are ample to execute any order in their line that can be done in this country. Country customers may rely upon their faithfulness and fairness in filling orders sent them. See advertisement in another column.

STAPLE AND FANCY GROCERIES.—The establishment of Messrs. Flash, Lewis & Co., on the corner of Peters and Gravier streets, is one of the largest and best assorted in the city. The growth of their business has justified the enlargement of their accommodations, and we have pleasure in commending them to the attention of our readers as worthy and honorable dealers and thorough merchants. See advertisement in another column.

COMMERCIAL BAKERY.—Messrs. Baumgarden & Langles, at the corner of Common and Tchoupitoulas streets, are building up a thriving business in superior crackers and bread, of which they keep a stock to supply grocers, hotels steamers and eating-houses. The Orchard bread which they make is especially commended to the attention of dyspeptics. See advertisement.

RUSSIAN VAPOR BATHS.—The establishment of Mr. Jacob Klock, at which he gives the vapor baths, is fitted up for the season. Invalids wishing to enjoy the advantages of these medicated vapor baths are referred to his advertisement. Ladies will take notice that the hours allotted to serving them are from eleven A. M. to one P. M.

POTATO DISEASE.—The report of the potato disease committee of the British Royal Agricultural Society has been recently published. It will be recollected that three years ago Earl Cathcart offered a prize of £100 for essays on the prevention of the disease. Although no fresh practical information was elicited, and it may perhaps be said no direct good came from this well meant offer, the society took the subject up and offered prizes for potatoes reported to be proof against disease. Two prizes were offered for the commencement of this year, for potatoes of varieties already known, and two are to be awarded five years hence for varieties that may be produced by cultivation before that period. Six different varieties were sent in, one ton (twenty bags of one hundred weight) of each. The society arranged to have these practically tested. Twelve stations in England, four in Scotland and four in Ireland were selected, and one hundred weight of each variety sent for planting of these so-called disease-proof potatoes. During the summer the botanic referee of the society visited all the localities, and in all cases disease was found. Much valuable information is likely to arise from the statistics that have been collected, for although it seems that no indication is given of how the disease can be prevented, yet under certain conditions, principally influenced by moisture, its effect is but small.

A NEW GRASS.—After Gen. Sherman made his march to the sea, all in the wide track of waste and desolation that he made with the tramp of his footmen and the iron feet of his cavalry, there sprang up a new and unknown grass from the soil, which the farmers called "Sherman clover." It would grow up in the most unexpected places, and it is said would root out Bermuda grass; and, as a strange similarity, we now hear that after the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 in many districts of France a new vegetation sprang up, evidently the result of the invasion. It was believed that this vegetation would become acclimatized, but very few of the species introduced in this way appear likely to flourish. In the departments of Loir and Loir-et-Cher, of one hundred and sixty-three German species, at least one-half have already disappeared, and the surviving species diminish in vigor each year. Scarcely five or six species appear to manifest any tendency to become acclimatized. Can any of our naturalists account for it?—Savannah Advertiser.

ARTICHOKES.—A few days ago we dug up fifteen hills which yielded two and a half bushels, thus yielding at the rate of eight hundred bushels per acre. When we take into account the ease with which this tuber is grown, its immense yield, and that all manner of stock eat and thrive upon it, is it not strange that more of it is not grown? Hogs will almost fatten on them and do their own digging. They can be put in a cellar, buried out of doors, or left in the ground to grow until spring. Frost does not hurt them. They are not only good for stock, but are quite a favorite with many as a pickle. I can testify to the fact in one family. There are two varieties, one growing quite large, round and full of bumps, while the other is long and thin, usually pointed at one end. The former yields most, is much easier to gather, and not hard to get rid of, while the latter is a perfect nuisance when once planted, and nothing short of hogs will rid the ground of them.—Colman's Rural World.

DESTROYING CURCULIOS.—A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph says:

"I have seen various methods for keeping these insects off plum-trees, but none so simple nor yet so effectual as the following: Soak corn-cobs in sweetened water until thoroughly saturated, then suspend them to the limbs of the trees a little while after blossoming, being sure to burn the cobs after the fruit ripens, as they will be found full of young insects. A good plan is to change the cobs every few weeks. My theory is this: That the insects deposit their eggs in the cobs in preference to doing so in the young plums. The first season I tried it upon one or two only, and in the summer was rewarded by a good crop of as fine plums as ever ripened, while those on the other trees fell off when about half grown. Next spring found sweetened corn-cobs dangling from the limbs of all my plum trees, and the summer found them full of delicious fruit."

HASTENING THE RIPENING OF FRUIT.—Acting upon the principle that renewal of the earth immediately surrounding the roots increases their activity, and accelerates the maturing of all parts of the plant, including the fruit, Mr. Stull removed the earth about an early pear-tree, eight weeks before the normal period of ripening, for a space thirteen to fifteen feet in diameter, and to such an extent as to leave a depth of earth over the roots of only about two and one-half inches, which would be thoroughly warmed by the sun. He was surprised not only by the ripening of the fruit in the middle of July, but also by its superior juiciness and flavor. In another experiment the removal of the earth from the north side of the tree alone caused the fruit on that side to ripen several days earlier than on the south side. Frequent watering was, of course, necessary in the above experiments.

KEEPING PEARS.—When mid-autumn pears are so plentiful as not to "pay" the growers for sending them to market, they should have recourse to heat for the purpose of keeping them out of the market, and thus regulate the supply. Let a quantity be picked off the trees a fortnight before they are ripe, and exposed to the sun; if under glass, so much the better. Let them lie until the skins are shriveled a little; then store them in a dry room, and they will not soften and be ripe till a month or six weeks after their usual time of ripening. The loss of water they have sustained by evaporation renders them less disposed to soften too rapid ripeness, yet their sugar and flavor remain good.

FOR INSECTS.—Hot alum water is said to be valuable as an insecticide. Two pounds of alum dissolved in three or four quarts of boiling water and applied to all cracks and crevices, will keep out and destroy all red ants black nuts, cockroaches, spiders, chinch bugs, fleas, etc. Travelers in strange countries should always carry a small package of powdered alum or borax with them, to scatter around their pillows where they suspect strange bed fellows.

TRIFLE.—In the bottom of a deep glass bowl place bits of sponge cake, it matters not how stale, cut into squares or strips; a small piece of preserved citron, also cut into very thin slices, interspersed with the cake. Soak these in a gill of some sort of pleasant sweet wine. Then fill up the bowl to within half an inch of the top with boiled custard, rich and cold. Lastly, heap the bowl up high with whipped syllabub.

IN beginning the world, if you don't wish to get cluted at every turn fold up your pride carefully, put it under lock and key, and only let it out to air upon grand occasions. Pride is a garment all stiff brocade outside, all grating sackcloth on the side next the skin. Even kings don't wear the delmaticum except at a coronation.
